

---

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google™ books

<https://books.google.com>

THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

EDITED BY

E. CAPPS, PH.D., LL.D.      T. E. PAGE, LITT.D.

W. H. D. ROUSE, LITT.D.

HORACE

SATIRES, EPISTLES, ARS POETICA

Horatius Flaccus, G.

H O R A C E

SATIRES, EPISTLES
AND ARS POETICA

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

H. RUSHTON FAIRCLOUGH

PROFESSOR OF CLASSICAL LITERATURE IN STANFORD UNIVERSITY CALIFORNIA

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN
NEW YORK: G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

MCMXXVI

Sn

349648

VIA MAIL ORDER

Printed in Great Britain.

ALFREDO BAKER
TORONTONENSI
PROFESSORI EMERITO
AMICITIAE GRATIA

PREFACE

As is the case with many other volumes in the Loeb Classical Library, it has been found necessary to make this book something more than a mere translation—something approaching a new edition of the poet.

Each of the Satires and Epistles has been provided with its own Introduction, and, inasmuch as the poet's transitions are not seldom rather abrupt, and often it is no easy matter to re-establish the connexion, a careful effort has been made to indicate the sequence of thought. Numerous allusions have been explained in the notes or Index ; many dubious passages have been discussed, however briefly, and the Latin text itself has been scrutinized in every detail. All important variant readings have been duly registered and considered, and the results of both old and recent scholarship have been utilized in translation or interpretation.

Acknowledgements are due to the general editors of the series, one of whom, Dr. T. E. Page, has read my manuscript carefully and offered many a timely and wise suggestion. Some explanations given of puzzling passages are due to him.

H. R. F.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
December 15, 1925.

vii

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION—
A. Chronology of the Poems . . . . .	xi
B. Earlier History of Satire . . . . .	xiv
C. Relation of Horace to Lucilius . . . . .	xvii
D. Manuscripts and Commentaries . . . . .	xxiii
E. Editions and Bibliography . . . . .	xxvii
F. Abbreviations . . . . .	xxx
SATIRES—
Book I. . . . .	1-123
SATIRE I. . . . .	2
" II. . . . .	17
" III. . . . .	30
" IV. . . . .	46
" V. . . . .	62
" VI. . . . .	75
" VII. . . . .	89
" VIII. . . . .	95
" IX. . . . .	103
" X. . . . .	112
Book II. . . . .	124-245
SATIRE I. . . . .	124
" II. . . . .	134
" III. . . . .	149
" IV. . . . .	183
	ix

CONTENTS

	PAGE
SATIRE V. . . . .	196
„ VI. . . . .	208
„ VII. . . . .	221
„ VIII. . . . .	236
EPISTLES—
Book I. . . . .	248-391
EPISTLE I. . . . .	248
„ II. . . . .	260
„ III. . . . .	269
„ IV. . . . .	275
„ V. . . . .	279
„ VI. . . . .	284
„ VII. . . . .	293
„ VIII. . . . .	305
„ IX. . . . .	309
„ X. . . . .	313
„ XI. . . . .	321
„ XII. . . . .	327
„ XIII. . . . .	333
„ XIV. . . . .	337
„ XV. . . . .	343
„ XVI. . . . .	348
„ XVII. . . . .	358
„ XVIII. . . . .	366
„ XIX. . . . .	379
„ XX. . . . .	387
Book II. . . . .	392-441
EPISTLE I. . . . .	392
„ II. . . . .	421
ARS POETICA OR EPISTLE TO THE PISONES. 442
INDEX OF PROPER NAMES . . . . .	491

INTRODUCTION

A. CHRONOLOGY OF THE POEMS

THE First Book of the Satires is the first work which Horace published, though it is possible that some of the Epodes were composed before any of the Satires. In Sat. i. 10. 45 Horace refers to Virgil's Eclogues, which were published in 37 B.C., while the introduction to Maecenas (Sat. i. 6. 54 ff.) is commonly assigned to 38 B.C. Allowing some time for the friendship between the poet and statesman to mature, and for the general interest, referred to in Sat. i. 6. 47, to be aroused, and keeping in view certain passages in Satires ii. (e.g. 6. 40), we may claim 35 B.C. as the probable date of the publication of Book I. At this time the poet was in his thirtieth year.

In 33 B.C. Horace received from Maecenas the gift of his Sabine farm, which figures so prominently in Book II. The Sixth Satire of this book makes several allusions to political events. In l. 53 mention is made of the Dacians, who in the struggle between Octavian and Antony offered themselves first to one leader and then to the other. At this time Octavian was necessarily absent from Rome, and in l. 38 Horace speaks of the administration of home affairs as being in the hands of Maecenas. After the battle of Actium (31 B.C.) public lands were assigned to the disbanded soldiers (l. 55). On the other hand the absence of any allusion to the closing of the temple of Janus or to the celebration of a triple triumph shows that Book II. appeared before 29 B.C. We may therefore claim 30 B.C. as the year of its publication.

INTRODUCTION

In the interval between the appearance of the Satires and that of the Epistles, Horace published the Epodes (29 B.C.) and Books I.-III. of the Odes (23 B.C.). The next work to appear was Book I. of the Epistles, the last verse of which (Epist. i. 20. 28) gives the consulship of Lollius as the date of writing. This would naturally imply that the book was finished in 21 B.C., but allusions to later events, such as the close of Agrippa's Cantabrian campaign, the restoration of the standards taken from Crassus (Epist. i. 12. 26 ff.), and the triumphal progress of Tiberius through the East (ib. i. 3. 144), show that the book was not published before the following year (20 B.C.).

The three Literary Epistles which remain are often classed together as the three Epistles of Book II., but the mss. and Scholia recognize only two Epistles in that Book, giving the third an independent position and a special name as Ars Poetica. Of the two the Second undoubtedly precedes the first in point of composition. It is addressed to Florus, to whom Epist. i. 3 had been sent, and who is still absent from Rome in the suite of Tiberius. The occasion for this absence need not be the same as for the earlier letter, yet in view of Horace's renunciation of lyric poetry (Epist. ii. 2. 65 ff.), this Epistle can hardly have been written in the years when the Carmen Saeculare and Odes iv. were produced (17-13

INTRODUCTION

B.C.). It was therefore, in all probability, written about 19–18 B.C.

The introduction to Epist. ii. 1 gives the main reason for believing that the Epistle to Augustus was written after both the Epistle to Florus and the Ars Poetica. Moreover, there are several passages in it which indicate a connexion between it and Horace's later lyrics. Thus ll. 132–137 refer unmistakably to the Carmen Saeculare of 17 B.C., and ll. 252–256, as Wickham has pointed out, show certain correspondences with the political Odes of Book IV., which was published in 13 B.C.

In the mss. the Ars Poetica appears after either the Carmen Saeculare or Odes iv. Its present position is due to sixteenth-century editors, and Cruquius (1578) first called it the Third Epistle of Book II. It was perhaps published by Horace independently, while Augustus was absent in Gaul, 16–13 B.C., but the fact that it reflects so much of the influence of Lucilius would indicate a still earlier date of composition.<sup>a</sup> It is not certain who the Pisones (a father and two sons) addressed in it are. According to Porphyrio, the father was L. Calpurnius Piso, praefectus urbi in A.D. 14. He was born in 49 B.C. and became consul 15 B.C., but could hardly have had grown-up sons several years before Horace's death. It is more likely that Piso pater was Cn. Calpurnius Piso, who, like Horace, fought under Brutus at Philippi and was afterwards consul in 23 B.C. He had a son, Gnaeus, who was consul 7 B.C., and another, Lucius, who was consul 1 B.C.

<sup>a</sup> See Fiske, Lucilius and Horace, pp. 446–475. According to Professor A. Y. Campbell, "the Ars Poetica was written at some time between 23–20 B.C. inclusive" (Horace, p. 235).

INTRODUCTION

B. EARLIER HISTORY OF SATIRE

The great literary critic Quintilian proudly claims Satire as a purely Roman creation, satira quidem tota nostra est (x. 1. 93). This kind of literature had originated in a sort of rustic farce, the mixed character of which had given it its name. As lanx satura was a dish filled with various kinds of fruit offered to the gods, and lex satura was a law which included a variety of provisions, so, in the literary sphere, satura (sc. fabula) was a miscellaneous story, which was originally presented as a dramatic entertainment.<sup>a</sup> After the introduction of the regular drama from Greece, the dramatic saturae, like the mimes and the Atellanae, survived as afterplays (exodia),<sup>b</sup> but the saturae of Livius Andronicus and Naevius were probably of the earlier, dramatic type.

Different from these were the saturae of Ennius and Pacuvius. These, to be sure, were miscellaneous both in subjects and in metrical forms, but they were composed for reading, not for acting. The Saturae of Ennius included the Epicharmus, a philosophic poem; the Euhemerus, a rationalistic treatment of mythology; the Heduphagetica, a mock heroic poem on gastronomy; the Sota, in the Sotadean metre; and the Scipio and the Ambracia, which dealt with contemporary persons and events. Of the Satires of Pacuvius we know nothing, and those of Ennius were quite overshadowed by his epic and dramatic poems.

<sup>a</sup> It is here assumed that the account given of the origin of the drama in Rome by the historian Livy (vii. 2), though somewhat confused, is essentially correct. Certain writers, however, notably Leo and Hendrickson, have regarded Livy's account as pure fiction.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. comic scenes performed separately after tragedies.

INTRODUCTION

The writer uniformly recognized as the founder of literary Satire (inventor, Horace, Sat. i. 10. 48) was Gaius Lucilius, who lived from 180 to 103 B.C. He was of equestrian rank and a man of wealth, the maternal uncle of Pompey the Great and a member of the Scipionic circle. His thirty books of Saturae,<sup>a</sup> written partly in trochaics, elegiacs and iambics, but mostly in hexameters, handled a great variety of topics. Fragments, numbering over 1300 verses, have been preserved, and are accessible in the splendid edition by F. Marx (2 vols., 1904, 1905), which has supplanted all earlier collections. A study of these throws a flood of light upon the important question of the relation of Horace to his model in the satiric field, and we are fortunate in having a very thorough survey of the subject in Lucilius and Horace, a study in the Classical Theory of Imitation, by Professor George Converse Fiske,<sup>b</sup> to which every future editor of Horace will be much indebted, and to which, therefore, we must often refer.

The Satires of Lucilius were largely autobiographical,

. . . quo fit ut omnis
votiva pateat veluti descripta tabella
vita senis.

(Horace, Sat. ii. 1. 32 ff.), and if they had survived intact we should to-day have <sup>a</sup> Cited thus by grammarians but called by Lucilius himself ludus ac sermones (fr. 1039). Note that the latter term sermones (or "Talks") was adopted by Horace in his turn as the title of his Satires.

<sup>b</sup> Published in University of Wisconsin Studies in Language and Literature, Madison, 1920.

INTRODUCTION

as complete a picture of the poet's life and times as any modern diarist has given of his. Lucilius portrayed not only himself but also his friends and foes, and at the same time discoursed upon the follies and vices of his day, as well as upon philosophy, religion, literature, and grammar; upon travels and adventures; upon eating and drinking, and the many incidents of daily life.

In his criticism of others Lucilius was unrestrained, and it is because of this παρρησία or freedom of speech that Horace makes him dependent upon the Old Comedy of Athens (Sat. i. 4. 1 ff.). Lucilius does indeed show an inexhaustible power of invective, but in this he harks back, not so much to Aristophanes, as to "the vivid and impromptu utterances of the Cynic and Stoic popular preachers."<sup>a</sup> He was, it is true, familiar with the whole range of Greek literature, and makes citations from Homer, Aristophanes, Euripides, Menander, and Plato. He alludes to Socrates and Aristippus, and draws freely upon the Academy and later exponents of Greek philosophy. Fiske aims at showing that "Lucilian satire is the product of a highly sophisticated Hellenistic environment combined with the Italian penchant for frank, vigorous, dramatic expression." In his diction, Lucilius was quite unlike Terence, that puri sermonis amator, for "Gallic words, Etruscan words, Syrian words, and words from the Italic dialects, Oscan, Pelignian, Praenestine, Sardinian, and Umbrian, even bits of Greek dialect slang, are found in his pages."<sup>b</sup>

We must remember both the plebeian origin of satire, and the chief characteristics of Lucilius, as well as the ancient mode of adhering closely to literary types, if we are to understand some of the features of later satire. Thus its excessive coarseness, especially in Juvenal, is largely a survival from early days, and this element in Horace's Satires, strictly limited to Book I., is due to our poet's following here too closely in the footsteps of Lucilius. So, too, the fierce invective, which Juvenal has taught us to regard as the main feature of satire, is a distinct inheritance from Lucilius.

<sup>a</sup> Fiske, p. 128.

<sup>b</sup> Fiske, p. 116.

INTRODUCTION

C. RELATION OF HORACE TO LUCILIUS

In the Satires and Epistles of Horace, it is easy to trace an interesting development in tone and character from the more peculiarly Lucilian compositions to those that are more distinctly independent and Horatian. Thus in the First Book of Satires, the Seventh, which sketches a trial scene before the court of Brutus, is to be closely associated with a satire in Book II. of Lucilius, where Scaevola is accused by Albucius of peculation in the province of Asia. In the Second, dealing with a repulsive subject, not only "the satiric moulding of the material," but even the vocabulary is "distinctly Lucilian."<sup>a</sup> Both of these poems, as well as the Eighth, were probably composed before Horace's introduction to Maecenas. The Eighth, however, is the only one of this First Book which shows no obvious connexion with Lucilius. It is a Priapeum—a late genre in Roman literature—but treated in satirical fashion.

The famous Fifth and Ninth Satires, though giving personal experiences of the writer, are nevertheless modelled somewhat closely upon Lucilius. Of the

<sup>a</sup> Fiske, pp. 271, 272.

INTRODUCTION

Fifth Porphyrio says, "Lucilio hac satyra aemulatur Horatius," and Horace's encounter with the bore will lose none of its interest, even when we learn that the Sixth Book of Lucilius contained a similar satire, which was his direct model.<sup>a</sup> The First Satire handles two themes which were much discussed in the popular philosophy of the Stoics, viz., discontent with one's lot and the love of riches. Both of these figured in more than one satire of Lucilius, the scanty fragments of whose Nineteenth Book furnish sufficient material to enable Fiske to reconstruct the particular Satire which was Horace's model here.<sup>b</sup>

In the remaining Satires of Horace's First Book, viz., the Third, Fourth, Sixth and Tenth, Horace is on his defence against hostile criticism. He makes a plea for satire as a literary form and tries to prove that it should not be disliked because of its subject matter. It is therefore not without reason that he places the Third next to the Second in the collection, so as to stand in direct contrast with it, for while the Second is coarse, brutal, and extremely personal,<sup>c</sup> the Third, dropping all abuse and invective, shows a kindly and genial tone which must tend to disarm all criticism. The Fourth and Tenth Satires still further show that the poet is casting off the spell of Lucilius. He is ready to criticize the very founder of the satiric genus scribendi and to set up standards of his own. "In fact," as Fiske says,<sup>d</sup> "Horace's Fourth satire may be regarded as an aesthetic and

<sup>a</sup> Fiske, p. 335.

<sup>b</sup> Fiske, pp. 246, 247.

<sup>c</sup> "From no other Satire, as the commentators point out, do we have such an extensive portrait gallery of contemporaries" (Fiske, p. 270).

<sup>d</sup> Fiske, p. 278.

INTRODUCTION

ethical analysis of the Lucilian theory of satire," while the Tenth, composed under the smart of hostile criticism, is a vigorous polemic directed, not so much against Lucilius himself, as against those critics of Horace's own day, who upheld the standards or lack of standards illustrated by the Satires of Lucilius. It is "only in the general recognition of his predecessor as the originator of the poetical form, and in acknowledgement of his skill in the employment of the harshest weapons of satire," that Horace here "treats Lucilius with consideration."<sup>a</sup> And as the Fourth and Tenth Satires are a defence of his art, so the Sixth is a defence of the poet himself, as well as of his noble patron and the circle of friends to which Horace has been admitted. The fragments show that in the Thirtieth Book Lucilius had discussed his own relations to some patron, and had placed the poet's calling above the lure of wealth, as Horace places it above political ambition.<sup>b</sup> If we had the whole poem, we should doubtless find that Horace had drawn a contrast between his own lowly birth, and the aristocratic origin of Lucilius.<sup>c</sup>

In the Second Book of the Satires, published as we have seen in 30 B.C., Horace finds it no longer necessary to make a serious defence of his satire. His position as a writer is now well established, and the controversies underlying Book I. have been settled in his favour. Yet the poet is not wholly

<sup>a</sup> Hendrickson, Horace and Lucilius, in Studies in Honor of B. L. Gildersleeve, p. 162 (Baltimore, 1902).

<sup>b</sup> Fiske, p. 318.

<sup>c</sup> See Sat. i. 6. 58, 59, where claro natum patre probably refers to Lucilius, who, according to Cichorius, had estates near Tarentum. Cf. Fiske, p. 320.

INTRODUCTION

free from anxiety, for there were certain legal restrictions that might prove embarrassing to the writer of satire.<sup>a</sup> Horace, therefore, in the First Satire of this book, asserts his right to freedom of speech, and makes an attack, however disguised in its humorous form, upon the libel laws of Rome, proclaiming at the same time that, as a satirist, he is armed for defence not offence, and that he must have the same privilege as Lucilius enjoyed, that of writing down his inmost thoughts and his personal comments upon the world.

The Second Satire of Book II. corresponds in theme, as well as position, with the Second of Book I. It applies the philosophic doctrine of "the mean" to daily living, eating and drinking, just as the earlier one applied it to sexual morality. It is strongly under the influence of Lucilius, though, like Sat. i. 2, it abounds in ideas which were common in the sermons of philosophers.

Closely connected with the Second are the Fourth and Eighth, which belong to a genre whose history is outlined in the introduction to the Fourth. The satiric δειπνον, of which the Cena Trimalchionis of Petronius is the most famous example, was represented in Lucilius by at least five satires.

The influence of Lucilius is still strong in the lengthy Third Satire, which deals with the Stoic paradox, ὅτι πᾶς ἄφρων μαίνεται, a theme which it would seem Lucilius had handled at least twice.<sup>b</sup> It is interesting to find that even the scene reproduced

<sup>a</sup> See Lejay, pp. 289-292. In Book I. twenty-four contemporaries are criticized; in II. only four. So Filbey, cited by Fiske, p. 416.

<sup>b</sup> Fiske, pp. 390 ff.

INTRODUCTION

by Horace (ll. 259-271) from the Eunuchus of Terence, was also utilized by Lucilius.<sup>a</sup>

In the remaining Satires of Book II., the Fifth, Sixth and Seventh, the influence of Lucilius seems to be very slight. The Sixth, it is true, illustrates the autobiographical element so conspicuous in Lucilius, and epic parody, exemplified in the Fifth, was doubtless employed by Lucilius, even as it had figured in the Middle and New Attic Comedy, but Horace is no longer under his sway, and when in the Seventh we find the poet professing to make himself a target for the shafts of satire, we realize that now at least he can be independent of his model.

The Epistles belong essentially to the same literary class as the Satires. Both kinds are conversational: <sup>b</sup>epistulis ad absentes loquimur, sermone cum praesentibus, says Acron. In subject matter the Epistles cover much the same field as the Satires. They deal with human foibles and frailties, discuss philosophic principles, open windows upon the poet's domestic circle, and give us incidents and scenes from daily life.

Lucilius had used the epistolary form in a satire of his Fifth Book, and Horace came to realize that this was the most satisfactory mould for him to adopt, when expressing his personal feelings and when passing judgement upon the literary and social problems of his time. As to thought and contents, however, the influence of Lucilius upon the Epistles is relatively very slight.<sup>c</sup> These poems, indeed, are the offspring of Horace's maturity, and themes

<sup>a</sup> Fiske, pp. 394 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Hendrickson, "Are the Letters of Horace Satires?" American Journal of Philology, xviii. pp. 312-324.

<sup>c</sup> See Fiske, pp. 427-440.

INTRODUCTION

already handled in the Satires are now presented in more systematic fashion, the writer disclosing a riper judgement and a more subtle refinement of mind. "Good sense, good feeling, good taste," says Mackail, "these qualities, latent from the first in Horace, had obtained a final mastery over the coarser strain with which they had at first been mingled."<sup>a</sup> The Epistles, indeed, with their criticism of life and literature, are the best expression of that "urbanity," which has ever been recognized as the most outstanding feature of Horace.

The two Epistles of the Second Book are devoted to literary criticism, which is an important element in the First Book of the Satires, and which, we may well believe, was first suggested to Horace by his relation to Lucilius. Even in these late productions, therefore, may be found traces of Lucilian influence,<sup>b</sup> but Horace writes with a free spirit, and in his literary, as in his philosophic, life, he is

nullius addictus iurare in verba magistri.<sup>c</sup>

As to the puzzling Ars Poetica, it is evident from the researches of Cichorius<sup>d</sup> and Fiske that it is quite largely indebted to Lucilius, who had a theory of literary criticism "formulated according to the same rhetorical σχήματα, and under substantially the same rhetorical influences . . . as Horace's Ars Poetica."<sup>e</sup> Moreover, a detailed comparison of the fragments of Lucilius with the Ars Poetica show numerous and striking similarities. To the present

<sup>a</sup> Latin Literature, p. 111.

<sup>b</sup> Fiske, pp. 441-446.

<sup>c</sup> Epist. ii. 1. 14.

<sup>d</sup> Untersuchungen zu Lucilius, pp. 109-127.

<sup>e</sup> Fiske, p. 468.

INTRODUCTION

writer it would seem to be an obvious inference from these facts that the Ars Poetica was largely composed some years before it was published. It may have been written originally in the regular satiric form, and afterwards adjusted, for publication, to the epistolary mould.

D. MANUSCRIPTS AND COMMENTARIES

The text of Horace does not rest on as firm a foundation as that of Virgil. Whereas the great epic writer is represented to-day by as many as seven manuscripts written in uncial or capital letters, all of the extant Horatian manuscripts are of the cursive type, and not one can claim to be older than the ninth century. Yet, putting Virgil aside, Horace, in comparison with the other Augustan poets, has fared very well, and his text has suffered comparatively little in the process of transmission.

The mss. number about two hundred and fifty, and have given rise to endless discussion as to their mutual relations, their classification, their line of descent from a common original, and their comparative value. Such questions have been rendered more uncertain by the incomplete knowledge which we possess of the four Blandinian mss. which were destroyed in 1566, when the Benedictine abbey of St. Peter, at Blankenberg near Ghent, was sacked by a mob. These mss. had, however, been rather carelessly collated a few years earlier by Cruquius, who, beginning with 1565, edited separate portions of Horace, and finally in 1578 published a complete edition of the poet at Antwerp. Of these lost Blandinian mss. Cruquius valued most highly the one which he calls vetustissimus, and which Bentley, Lachmann, and other later editors have regarded as the soundest foundation for the establishment of a correct Horatian text. Unfortunately, doubt has been cast upon the accuracy of the statements of Cruquius, and Keller and Holder depreciate the value of this lost ms.

INTRODUCTION

The two scholars just named, the most painstaking editors of the Horatian text, have adopted a grouping of the mss. in three classes, each of which is based on a lost archetype. The three archetypes are ultimately derived from an original archetype of the first or second century. The claim is made that a reading found in the mss. of two classes should take precedence over that found in only one. The three classes are distinguished from one another by the degree of systematic alteration and interpolation to which they have been subjected.

This elaborate classification of Keller and Holder's has proved too complicated and has failed to win general acceptance. A simpler and more satisfactory grouping has been attempted by Professor Vollmer of Munich in his recension of 1906 (2nd edition 1912) in which the editor, returning to the principles of Bentley, endeavours to reconstruct the sixth century Mavortian <sup>a</sup> edition, beyond which, however far this may have departed from the original Horatian text, one can hardly hope to go. Vollmer enumerates only fifteen mss., which he divides into two groups, I. and II. In Class I. he includes K, a codex not known to Keller and Holder. The vetustissimus (V) he places in Class II. along with a Vatican ms., R, of the ninth century and the Gothanus of the fifteenth century, which reveals its kinship with V. The readings of Class II. are often to be preferred to those of Class I.

<sup>a</sup> The name of Mavortius, who was consul in A.D. 527, appears in association with that of Felix, orator urbis Romae, as an emendator or διορθωτής, in eight mss., including A, λ, l, and Goth.

INTRODUCTION

In 1912, in revising for the Clarendon Press Wickham's text edition of Horace, Professor Garrod of Oxford carried this simplification still further. He adopts Vollmer's classification, but drops some mss. which he finds to have little significance, viz. from Class I., A, which is a mere duplicate of a, and K; while from Class II. he omits R, Goth., λ (Parisinus 7972), and l (= Leidensis Lat. 28). On the other hand, he recalls M, which Keller had overestimated but Vollmer had rejected as of little value. V, placed outside the two classes, is held in high esteem.

The mss. cited in this edition are as follows :

- a* = codex Ambrosianus 136, from Avignon, now in Milan. Tenth century. Available for Satires and Epistles, except from Sat. ii. 7. 27 to ii. 8. 95.
- A* = Parisinus 7900 a. Tenth century. Used for Epistles i. (here by a second hand), and to supplement a.
- B* = codex Bernensis 363; in Bern, Switzerland. Written by an Irish scribe at the end of the ninth century. Available for Satires up to i. 3. 135, and for Ars Poet. up to l. 441.
- C* and E = codex Monacensis 14685 (two parts). Eleventh century. C is available from Sat. i. 4. 122 up to i. 6. 40; for Sat. ii. 8; and for Ars Poet. up to l. 441. E is available for Satires and Epistles, except for Sat. ii. 5. 87 up to ii. 6. 33; and for Ars Poet., except ll. 441 to 476.
- D* = codex Argentoratensis. Destroyed at Strasburg 1870. Tenth century. Available for Satires and Epistles, xxv

INTRODUCTION

except from Sat. ii. 2. 132 to ii. 3. 75; from Sat. ii. 5. 95 to Epist. ii. 2. 112. Not available for Ars Poet.

K = codex S. Eugendi, now St. Claude. Eleventh century. Available for Satires up to ii. 2. 25, and for Ars Poet.

M = codex Mellicensis. Eleventh century. Available for Satires, except from ii. 5. 95 and a portion of ii. 3; and for Epistles, except from i. 6. 57 to i. 16. 35.

The above mss. constitute Class I.

R = Vaticanus Reginae 1703. Ninth century. Available for Satires and Epistles, except from Sat. i. 3. 28 to i. 8. 4, and from Sat. ii. 1. 16 to ii. 8. 95.

δ = codex Harleianus 2725. Ninth century. Available for Satires up to i. 2. 114; and for Epistles up to i. 8. 8, and from ii. 2. 19 to the end of Ars Poetica.

λ = Parisinus 7972. Tenth century. Complete.

l = Leidensis Lat. 28. Ninth century. Complete.

π = codex Parisinus 10310. Ninth or tenth century. Available for Epistles and Ars Poetica, but for Satires only up to i. 2. 70.

φ = codex Parisinus 7974. Tenth century. Complete.

ψ = codex Parisinus 7971. Tenth century. Complete.

Goth. = Gothanus. Fifteenth century. This lacks the Ars Poetica.

These constitute Class II.

Besides these, account must be taken (through the edition of Cruquius) of the four lost Blandinian mss. (designated as Bland.), the chief of which was V (= vetustissimus). In a number of cases V alone (or in conjunction with Goth.) preserved the correct reading. The most striking instance of this is given in Sat. i. 1. 126, but other examples are afforded by Sat. i. 1. 108; ii. 2. 56; ii. 3. 303; ii. 4. 44; ii. 8. 88; Epist. i. 10. 9; i. 16. 43. On the whole, however, V was probably just as faulty as are most of the extant mss., no one of which stands out as conspicuous for accuracy. Yet, as a group, the mss. of Class I. are distinctly superior to those of Class II., though not infrequently the latter preserve correct readings which the former had lost.

xxvi

INTRODUCTION

Collections of Horatian scholia, or explanatory notes, have come down to us from antiquity under the names of Porphyrio and Acron. These scholars lived probably in the third century of our era, Acron being the earlier of the two, but the scholia now surviving under Acron's name are as late as the fifth century. Both collections are largely interpolated. Both, however, precede our mss. in point of time, and are therefore valuable in determining the priority of conflicting readings.

The term Commentator Cruquianus is given to a collection of notes gathered by Cruquius from the marginalia in his Blandinian mss.

E. EDITIONS AND BIBLIOGRAPHY

The editio princeps of Horace appeared in Italy, without date or name of place, about 1470, and was followed by the annotated edition by Landinus, Florence, 1482. Lambin's, which first appeared in 1561, was frequently republished in Paris and elsewhere. The complete edition by Cruquius was issued at Antwerp, 1578. Modern editions may be said to begin with Heinsius, Leyden, 1612. Bentley's (Cambridge, 1711, Amsterdam 1713, and frequently republished) marks an epoch in Horatian study. Among nineteenth-century editors may be mentioned Döring (Leipzig, 1803), Lemaire (Paris, 1829), Peerlkamp

INTRODUCTION

(Harlem, 1834), Dillenburger (Bonn, 1844), Duentzer (Brunswick, 1849) and Orelli, whose text and commentary (revised by Baiter 1852, then by Hirschfelder and Mewes—fourth large edition, Berlin, 1892) became the standard. Ritter's edition is dated 1856-1857, Leipzig. Keller and Holder's (editio maior, Leipzig, 1864-70; editio minor, 1878) is based on an exhaustive study of the mss. Vollmer's important edition (2nd, 1912, Leipzig) has a serviceable apparatus criticus. One of the best annotated editions is A. Kiessling's, Berlin, 1884 and later; revised by Heinze, 1910. Another good one is that of Schütz, Berlin, 1880-83, and one by L. Müller, Leipzig, 1891-1893. English editions are Maclean's, London, 1869 (4th, 1881); Wickham's, 2 vols., annotated, Oxford, 1878 and 1891, and the Page, Palmer and Wilkins edition, London and New York, 1896. Wickham's text edition, Oxford, 1900, was revised by Garrod, 1912 (see p. xxv). In America the best complete editions are those by C. L. Smith and J. B. Greenough, Boston, 1894, and by C. H. Moore and E. P. Morris, New York, 1909. In France, there is the Waltz edition, Paris, 1887. Of the Plessis and Lejay edition only the volume of Satires by Lejay has thus far appeared (Paris, 1911). The best complete edition in Italy is Fumagalli's, Rome, 5th, 1912.

Special editions of the Satires and Epistles are numerous. A few that we may mention are those by A. Palmer, Satires, London and New York, 1883; A. S. Wilkins, Epistles, London and New York, 1885; J. Gow, Satires, i. Cambridge, 1901; J. C. Rolfe, Boston, 1901; P. Rasi, Milan, 1906-07; Sabbadini, Turin, 1906; E. P. Morris, New York, 1909-11.

xxviii

INTRODUCTION

Among other works of importance for the study of Horace may be mentioned the following :

- F. Hauthal, Acronis et Porphyryonis commentarii in Horatium, Berlin, 1864-66.
W. Meyer, Porphyryonis commentarii in Horatium, Leipzig, 1874.
R. M. Hovenden, Horace's Life and Character, London, 1877.
O. Keller, Epilegomena zu Horaz, Leipzig, 1879-80.
W. Y. Sellar, Horace, Roman Poets of the Augustan Age, Oxford, 1892.
R. Y. Tyrrell, Latin Poetry; Johns Hopkins Lectures, 1893.
J. W. Mackail, Latin Literature, New York, 1895.
Gaston Boissier, The Country of Horace and Virgil, translated by Fisher, New York, 1896.
A. Cartault, Étude sur les Satires d'Horace, Paris, 1899.
O. Keller, Pseudacronis scholia in Horatium vetustiora, Leipzig, 1902-4.
F. Marx, C. Lucilii carminum reliquiae, 2 vol., Leipzig, 1904-5.
C. Cichorius, Untersuchungen zu Lucilius, Berlin, 1908.
J. W. Duff, Literary History of Rome, London, 1909.
F. Leo, Geschichte der römischen Literatur, Berlin, 1913.
Courtand, Horace, sa vie et sa pensée à l'époque des Épîtres, Paris, 1914.
Lane Cooper, A Concordance to the Works of Horace, Washington (The Carnegie Institution), 1916.
Mary Rebecca Thayer, The Influence of Horace on the Chief English Poets of the Nineteenth Century, New Haven, 1916.
J. F. D'Alton, Horace and his Age, London and New York, 1917.
G. C. Fiske, Lucilius and Horace : a Study in the Classical Theory of Imitation, Madison, Wisconsin, 1920.
Grant Showerman, Horace and his Influence, Boston, 1922.
H. N. Fowler, A History of Roman Literature, New York, 1923 (2nd edition).
E. E. Sikes, Roman Poetry, London, 1923.

INTRODUCTION

A. Y. Campbell, Horace, a new Interpretation, London, 1924.

Elizabeth H. Haight, Horace and his Art of Enjoyment, New York, 1925.

There are also many pamphlets and periodical articles, too numerous to record, which must be consulted by an editor of Horace.

F. ABBREVIATIONS

A.J.P. = American Journal of Philology.

A.P.A. = Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association.

C.P. = Classical Philology.

C.R. = Classical Review.

C.W. = Classical Weekly.

Fiske = Lucilius and Horace, by G. C. Fiske.

Harv. St. = Harvard Studies in Classical Philology.

J.P. = Journal of Philology.

Rh. M. = Rheinisches Museum für klassische Philologie.

Editions of Horace are often referred to by the name of the editor alone, e.g. Lejay = the Lejay edition of the Satires.

SATIRES

B

I

THE RACE FOR WEALTH AND POSITION

THE opening Satire serves as a dedication of the whole book to Maecenas, and deals with a conspicuous feature of social life in the Augustan age.

Everybody, says Horace, is discontented with his lot and envies his neighbour. Yet, if some god were to give men a chance to change places, they would all refuse. The cause of this restlessness is the longing for wealth. Men will assure you that the only reason why they toil unceasingly is that they may secure a competence and then retire. They claim to be like the ant, which provides so wisely for the future; but the ant enjoys its store when winter comes, whereas the money-seeking man never ceases from his labours, so long as there is one richer than himself (1-40).

And yet what is the use of large possessions? If a man has enough, more wealth will prove a burden and a peril. The miser claims that the wealthier he is the more highly will men think of him. I will not argue the point, says Horace, but will leave him to his self-esteem. He is like Tantalus, tortured with thirst though the waters are so near. Your avaricious man suffers all the pain, and enjoys none of the pleasure that money can buy. There is indeed

SATIRES, I. I.

no more certain cause of misery than avarice. Yet one must not run to the other extreme, but should observe the golden mean (41-107).

To return to the starting-point: everybody is trying to outstrip his neighbour in the race for wealth. People are never satisfied, and therefore we seldom see a man who is ready to quit the banquet of life like a guest who has had enough (108-119).

But enough of this preaching, or you will think that I have rifled the papers of Crispinus (120, 121).

Palmer thinks that this Satire "was probably the last composed of those in the first book," and Morris speaks of its "maturity of style and treatment." Campbell, however, points out "distinct signs of immaturity," such as the Lucretian echo in ll. 23-26, a passage which "smacks of the novice in satire-writing" (cf. Lucr. i. 936 ff.), the weakness of l. 108, and the "lame conclusion" in ll. 120, 121 (Horace, p. 165). Lejay thinks that our author composed the discussion of avaritia (28-117) first, and later, when dedicating his book to Maccenas, added the beginning and the end. This is a very plausible view.

A minute analysis of this Satire is given by Charles Knapp in the Transactions of the American Philological Association, xlv. pp. 91 ff.

SERMONUM

LIBER PRIMUS

I.

Qui fit, Maecenas, ut nemo, quam sibi sortem
seu ratio dederit seu fors<sup>1</sup> obiecerit, illa contentus vivat, laudet diversa sequentis ?
“ o fortunati mercatores ! ” gravis annis<sup>2</sup> miles ait, multo iam fractus membra labore. 5
contra mercator, navem iactantibus Austris, “ militia est potior. quid enim ? concurritur : horae momento cita mors venit aut victoria laeta.”
agricolam laudat iuris legumque peritus, sub galli cantum consultor ubi ostia pulsat. 10
ille, datis vadibus qui rure extractus in urbem est, solos felices viventis clamat<sup>3</sup> in urbe.
cetera de genere hoc, adeo sunt multa, loquacem
delassare valent Fabium. ne te morer, audi quo rem deducam. si quis deus “ en ego ” dicat, 15

<sup>1</sup> fors V MSS. : sors B.

<sup>2</sup> annis MSS. : armis conjectured by Bouhier and accepted by Vollmer. <sup>3</sup> cantat B.

---

<sup>a</sup> The reference is not so much to the professional lawyer as to the influential citizen, whose humble clients come at daybreak to ask for advice. Such a citizen would commonly have had a good legal training. With him is

SATIRES

BOOK I

SATIRE I

How comes it, Maecenas, that no man living is content with the lot which either his choice has given him, or chance has thrown in his way, but each has praise for those who follow other paths? "O happy traders!" cries the soldier, as he feels the weight of years, his frame now shattered with hard service. On the other hand, when southern gales toss the ship, the trader cries: "A soldier's life is better. Do you ask why? There is the battle clash, and in a moment of time comes speedy death or joyous victory." One learned in law and statutes has praise for the farmer, when towards cockerow a client comes knocking at his door.<sup>a</sup> The man yonder, who has given surety and is dragged into town from the country cries that they only are happy who live in town. The other instances of this kind—so many are they—could tire out the chatterbox Fabius. To be brief with you, hear the conclusion to which I am coming. If some god were to say:<sup>b</sup> contrasted a countryman, who is a defendant in some case and must, therefore, come to the city against his will.

<sup>b</sup> Horace imagines a dramatic scene where a god appears ex machina. Cf. Sat. ii. 7. 24; Ars Poetica, 191.

HORACE

“ iam faciam, quod voltis : eris tu, qui modo miles, mercator ; tu, consultus modo, rusticus ; hinc vos,
vos hinc mutatis discedite partibus : eia !
quid statis ? ”—nolint.<sup>1</sup> atqui licet esse beatis.
quid causae est, merito quin illis Iuppiter ambas 20
iratus buccas inflet neque se fore posthac
tam facilem dicat, votis ut praebeat aurem ?

Praeterea, ne sic, ut qui iocularia, ridens<sup>2</sup>
percurram : quamquam ridentem dicere verum quid vetat ? ut pueris olim dant crustula blandi, 25
doctores, elementa velint ut discere prima :
sed tamen amoto quaeramus seria ludo :
ille gravem duro terram qui vertit aratro,
perfidus hic caupo, miles nautaeque per omne audaces mare qui currunt, hac mente laborem 30
sese ferre, senes ut in otia tuta recedant, aiunt, cum sibi sint congesta cibaria ; sicut parvola, nam exemplo est, magni formica laboris ore trahit quodcumque potest atque addit acervō quem struit, haud ignara ac non incauta futuri. 35
quae, simul inversum contristat Aquarius annum,
non usquam prorepit et illis utitur ante quaesitis sapiens,<sup>3</sup> cum te neque fervidus aestus dremoveat lucro neque hiems, ignis, mare, ferrum, nil obstet tibi, dum ne sit te ditior alter. 40

Quid iuvat immensum te argenti pondus et auri
furtim defossa timidum deponere terra ?

“ quod si comminuas, vilem redigatur ad assem.”

<sup>1</sup> nolent B.

<sup>2</sup> ll. 22, 23 with order inverted BK.

<sup>3</sup> sapiens V, II ; patiens I.

---

<sup>a</sup> The sun enters the sign of Aquarius in January, the chilliest month of a Roman winter, when the year's cycle begins anew.

"Here I am! I will grant your prayers forthwith. You, who were but now a soldier, shall be a trader; you, but now a lawyer, shall be a farmer. Change parts; away with you—and with you! Well! Why standing still?" They would refuse. And yet 'tis in their power to be happy. What reason is there why Jove should not, quite properly, puff out both cheeks at them in anger, and say that never again will he be so easy-going as to lend ear to their prayers?

<sup>23</sup> Furthermore, not to skim over the subject with a laugh like a writer of witticisms—and yet what is to prevent one from telling truth as he laughs, even as teachers sometimes give cookies to children to coax them into learning their A B C?—still, putting jesting aside, let us turn to serious thoughts: yon farmer, who with tough plough turns up the heavy soil, our rascally host here, the soldier, the sailors who boldly scour every sea, all say that they bear toil with this in view, that when old they may retire into secure ease, once they have piled up their provisions; even as the tiny, hard-working ant (for she is their model) drags all she can with her mouth, and adds it to the heap she is building, because she is not unaware and not heedless of the morrow. Yet she, soon as Aquarius saddens the upturned year,<sup>a</sup> stirs out no more but uses the store she gathered beforehand, wise creature that she is; while as for you, neither burning heat, nor winter, fire, sea, sword, can turn you aside from gain—nothing stops you, until no second man be richer than yourself.

<sup>41</sup> What good to you is a vast weight of silver and gold, if in terror you stealthily bury it in a hole in the ground? But if one splits it up, it would

HORACE

at ni id fit, quid habet pulchri constructus acervus?
 milia frumenti tua triverit area centum, 45 non tuus hoc capiet venter plus ac<sup>1</sup> meus; ut si reticulum panis venalis inter onusto forte vehas umero, nihilo plus accipias quam qui nil portarit.

Vel dic, quid referat intra

naturae finis viventi, iugera centum an 50
 mille aret? "at suave est ex magno tollere acervo."
 dum ex parvo nobis tantundem haurire relinquis, cur tua plus laudes cumeris granaria nostris?
 ut tibi si sit opus liquidum non amplius urna vel cyatho, et dicas "magno de flumine malle<sup>2</sup> 55 quam ex hoc fonticulo tantundem sumere." eo fit, plenior ut si quos delectet copia iusto,
 cum ripa simul avolsos ferat Aufidus acer.
 at qui tantuli eget, quanto est opus, is neque limo turbatam haurit aquam, neque vitam amittit in undis.

At<sup>3</sup> bona pars hominum decepta cupidine falso 61
 "nil satis est" inquit, "quia tanti quantum habéas sis."

quid facias illi? iubeas miserum esse, libenter quatenus id facit: ut quidam memoratur Athenis sordidus ac dives, populi contemnere voces 65
 sic solitus: "populus me sibilat, at mihi plaudo
 ipse domi, simul ac nummos contemplor in arca."

Tantalus a labris sitiens fugientia captat flumina—quid rides? mutato nomine de te

<sup>1</sup> ac B: quam aDEM.

<sup>2</sup> malle B: malim, II, Bentley, Vollmer.

<sup>3</sup> at K<sup>2</sup>: ut MSS.: Vollmer.

<sup>a</sup> Here and below, the miser speaks for himself.

<sup>b</sup> The picture is that of a gang of slaves driven to the market for sale. One of them carries the provisions for all.

<sup>c</sup> The Aufidus, a stream in Horace's native Apulia, at times became a raging torrent, undermining its banks.

dwindle to a paltry penny." <sup>a</sup> ~~Yet if that is not~~ . . .
 done, what beauty has the piled-up heap? Suppose your threshing-floor has threshed out a hundred thousand bushels of grain; your stomach will not on that account hold more than mine: 'tis as if in the slave-gang you by chance should carry the heavy bread-bag on your shoulder, yet you would receive no more than the slave who carries nothing.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>49</sup> Or, tell me, what odds does it make to the man who lives within Nature's bounds, whether he ploughs a hundred acres or a thousand? "But what a pleasure to take from a large heap!" So long as you let us take just as much from our little one, why praise your granaries above our bins? It is as if ~~you needed no more~~ than a jug or a cup of water, and were to say, "I'd rather have taken the quantity
 from a broad river than from this tiny brook." So it ~~comes about that when any find pleasure in undue~~ abundance, raging Aufidus sweeps them away, bank and all; while the man who craves only so much as he needs, neither draws water thick with mud, nor loses his life in the flood.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>61</sup> But a good many people, misled by blind desire, say, "You cannot have enough; for you get your rating from what you have." What can you do to a man who talks thus? Bid him be miserable, since that is his whim. He is like a rich miser in Athens who, they say, used thus to scorn the people's talk: "The people hiss me, but at home I clap my hands for myself, once I gaze on the moneys in my chest."

<sup>62</sup> Tantalus, thirsty soul, catches at the streams that fly from his lips—why laugh? Change but

HORACE

fabula narratur : congestis undique saccis 70
 indormis inhians, et tamquam parcere sacris cogeris aut pictis tamquam gaudere tabellis.
 nescis quo valeat nummus, quem praebeat usum ?
panis ematur, holus, vini sextarius ; adde
 quis humana sibi doleat natura negatis. 75
 an vigilare metu exanimem, noctesque diesque formidare malos fures, incendia, servos, ne te compilent fugientes, hoc iuvat ? horum
 semper ego optarim<sup>1</sup> pauperrimus esse bonorum.
 “ At si condoluit, temptatum frigore corpus 80 aut alius casus lecto te adfixit,<sup>2</sup> habes qui adsideat, fomenta paret, medicum roget, ut te suscitet ac reddat gnatis<sup>3</sup> carisque propinquis.”
 non uxor saluum te vult,<sup>4</sup> non filius ; omnes vicini oderunt, noti, pueri atque puellae. 85
 miraris, cum tu argento post omnia ponas, si nemo praestet quem non merearis amorem ?
 an si<sup>5</sup> cognatos, nullo Natura labore
 quos tibi dat, retinere velis servareque amicos, infelix operam perdas, ut si quis asellum 90
 in Campo doceat parentem currere frenis ?
 Denique sit finis quaerendi, cumque habeas plus, pauperiem metuas minus et finire laborem
 incipias, parto quod avebas,<sup>6</sup> ne facias quod
 Ummidius quidam.<sup>7</sup> non longa est fabula : dives 95

<sup>1</sup> optarem, I.

<sup>2</sup> adfixit K, so Bentley and most editors : adfixit most MSS.

<sup>3</sup> gnatis reddat Goth.

<sup>4</sup> te vult saluum D.

<sup>5</sup> an si] at si K : an sic Goth.

<sup>6</sup> habebas B.

<sup>7</sup> quidam] qui tam Bentley.

the name, and the tale is told of you. You sleep with open mouth on money-bags piled up from all sides, and must perforce keep hands off as if they were hallowed, or take delight in them as if painted pictures. Don't you know what money is for, what end it serves? You may buy bread, greens, a measure of wine, and such other things as would mean pain to our human nature, if withheld. What, to lie awake half-dead with fear, to be in terror night and day of wicked thieves, of fire, of slaves, who may rob you and run away—is this so pleasant? In such blessings I could wish ever to be poorest of the poor.

<sup>80</sup> “But if your body is seized with a chill and racked with pain, or some other mishap has pinned you to your bed, have you some one to sit by you, to get lotions ready, to call in the doctor so as to raise you up and restore you to your children and dear kinsmen?” No, your wife does not want you well, nor does your son: every one hates you, neighbours and acquaintances, boys and girls. Can you wonder, when you put money above all else, that nobody pays you the love you do not earn? Or, when Nature gives you kinsfolk without trouble, if you sought to hold and keep their love, would it be as fruitless a waste of effort, as if one were to train an ass to race upon the Campus<sup>a</sup> obedient to the rein?

<sup>92</sup> In short, set bounds to the quest of wealth, and as you increase your means let your fear of poverty lessen, and when you have won your heart's desire, begin to bring your toil to an end, lest you fare like a certain Ummidius—'tis a short story—so

<sup>a</sup> The Campus Martius.

HORACE

ut metiretur nummos ; ita sordidus, ut se non umquam servo melius vestiret ; ad usque supremum tempus, ne se penuria victus opprimeret, metuebat. at hunc liberta securi
divisit medium, fortissima Tyndaridarum. 100

“ Quid mi igitur suades ? ut vivam Naevius aut sic ut Nomentanus ? ” pergis pugnantia secum frontibus adversis componere. non ego, avarum cum veto te fieri, vappam iubeo ac nebulonem.
est inter Tanain quiddam socerumque Viselli : 105
est modus in rebus, sunt certi denique fines,
quos ultra citraque nequit consistere rectum.

Illuc, unde abii, redeo, qui nemo, ut<sup>1</sup> avarus, se probet ac potius laudet diversa sequentis, quodque aliena capella gerat distentius uber, 110
tabescat, neque se maiori pauperiorum
turbæ comparet, hunc atque hunc superare laboret.
sic festinanti semper locupletior obstat,
ut, cum carceribus missos rapit ungula currus,
instat equis auriga suos<sup>2</sup> vincentibus, illum 115
praeteritum temnens extremos inter euntem.
inde fit ut raro, qui se vixisse beatum

<sup>1</sup> qui nemo ut V: nemon ut mss., Porph.: cum nemo ut Keck, Vollmer. For other attempts to improve the text see Knapp, loc. cit. pp. 102 ff.

<sup>2</sup> suis aDEM.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. instead of counting it. The idea was proverbial, cf. Xen. Hellen. iii. 2. 27 ; Petronius, Sat. 37.

<sup>b</sup> Clytemnestra, daughter of Tyndareus, slew her husband Agamemnon with an axe. Possibly the freedwoman's name was Tyndaris.

<sup>c</sup> Both of these names were used by Lucilius. The men represent the spendthrift type.

rich that he ~~measured~~ his money,<sup>a</sup> so miserly that he dressed no better than a slave; ~~up to his last hour~~ he feared he would die of starvation. Yet a freed-woman cleft him in twain with an axe, bravest of the Tyndarid breed.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>101</sup> "What, then, would you have me do? Live as a Naeivius or a Nomentanus?"<sup>c</sup> ~~You go on to set opposites in head to head conflict with each other.<sup>d</sup> When I call on you not to be a miser, I am not bidding you become a worthless prodigal.~~ There is some mean between a Tanais and the father-in-law of Visellius.<sup>e</sup> There is measure in all things. There are, in short, fixed bounds, ~~beyond and short~~ of which right can find no place.

<sup>108</sup> I return to my starting-point, how it comes that no man because of his greed is self-contented, but rather does each praise those who follow other paths, ~~pires away because his neighbour's goat shows a more distended udder, and, instead of matching himself with the greater crowd of poorer men, strives to surpass first one and then another.~~ In such a race there is ever a richer in your way. 'Tis as when chariots are let loose from the barriers and swept onwards behind the hoofed steeds: hard on the horses that outstrip his own presses the charioteer, ~~caring naught for that other whom he has passed and left in the rear.~~ Thus it comes that seldom can we find one who says he has had a happy

<sup>a</sup> The figure is taken, not so much from gladiators, as from rams or bulls. Knapp takes componere as "reconcile" (loc. cit. p. 101).

<sup>b</sup> Tanais is said to have been a freedman of Maecenas. The other person is unknown.

<sup>c</sup> This passage closely resembles Virgil, Georg. i. 512 ff.

HORACE

dicat et exacto contentus tempore vita<sup>1</sup>
cedat uti conviva satur, reperire queamus.

Iam satis est. ne me Crispini scrinia lippi 120
compilasse putes, verbum non amplius addam.

<sup>1</sup> vitae D.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Lucretius, iii. 938,

Cur non ut plenus vitae conviva recedis,
Aequo animoque capis securam, stulte, quietem ?

SATIRES, I. 1. 118-121

life, and who, when his time is sped, will quit life in contentment, like a guest who has had his fill.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>120</sup> Well, 'tis enough. Not a word more will I add, or you will think I have rifled the rolls of blear-eyed Crispinus.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>b</sup> The scrinia were the cylindrical boxes in which rolls of manuscript were kept. Crispinus, according to the scholiasts, was an aretalogus, one who babbled about virtue. He wrote, we are told, in verse.

II

THE FOLLY OF RUNNING TO EXTREMES

MEN seldom keep the golden mean, but run from one extreme to another. Especially may this be illustrated by victims of sensual indulgence and by people guilty of adultery, a vice which has become a shocking feature of the age.

This immature and forbidding sketch, coarse and sensational in tone, and doubtless one of Horace's earliest efforts, is closely associated with the Lucilian type of satire. It abounds in personalities, freely handled, and Horace himself (in Sat. i. 4. 92) cites it later as an illustration of the kind of writing which had aroused enmity against the author. Even Maecenas, if we are to believe the scholiasts, is thinly disguised in the Maltinus of l. 25.

In his introduction to this Satire, Lejay has shown how dependent it ultimately is "upon the erotic literature of the Hellenistic period as expressed in the popular Cynic philosophy, in the New Comedy, and in the Anthology" (Fiske, p. 251). There is a striking parallel between it and a poem on love in the Oxyrhynchus Papyri by the Cynic Cercidas of Megalopolis, who lived in the latter part of the third century B.C. See Chapter I. of Powell and Barber's New Chapters in the History of Greek Literature (Oxford, 1921).

II.

Ambubaiarum collegia, pharmacopolae, mendici, mimae, balatrones, hoc genus omne
maestum ac sollicitum est cantoris morte Tigelli :
quippe benignus erat. contra hic, ne prodigus esse dicatur metuens, inopi dare nolit amico, 5
frigus quo duramque famem propellere<sup>1</sup> possit.
hunc si perconteris, avi cur atque parentis praeclaram ingrata stringat malus ingluvie rem, omnia conductis coemens obsonia nummis :
sordidus atque animi quod parvi nolit haberi, 10
respondet. laudatur ab his, culpatur ab illis.
Fufidius vappae famam timet ac nebulonis, dives agris, dives positus in faenore nummis :<sup>2</sup>
quinas hic capiti mercedes exsecat,<sup>3</sup> atque quanto perditior quisque est, tanto acrius urget ; 15
nomina sectatur modo sumpta veste virili sub patribus duris tironum. " maxime " quis non " Iuppiter ! " exclamat, simul atque audivit ? " at in se
pro quaestu sumptum facit hic.<sup>4</sup> vix credere possis

<sup>1</sup> depellere, II.

<sup>2</sup> l. 13 (= Ars Poet. 421) rejected by Sanadon, Holder.

<sup>3</sup> exigit E<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> facit. Hic ? some editors. hic] hoc δφψ.

---

<sup>a</sup> The usual rate was one per cent a month, twelve per 18

SATIRE II

The flute-girls' guilds, the drug-quacks, beggars, actresses, buffoons, and all that breed, are in grief and mourning at the death of the singer Tigellius. He was, they say, so generous. On the other hand, here's one who, fearing to be called a prodigal, would grudge a poor friend the wherewithal to banish cold and hunger's pangs. Should you ask another why, in his thankless gluttony, he recklessly strips the noble estate of his sire and grandsire, buying up every dainty with borrowed money, he answers that it is because he would not like to be thought mean and of poor spirit. He is praised by some, blamed by others. Fufidius, rich in lands, rich in moneys laid out at usury, fears the repute of a worthless prodigal; five times the interest he slices away from the principal,<sup>a</sup> and the nearer a man is to ruin, the harder he presses him; he aims to get notes-of-hand from youths who have just donned the toga of manhood, and have stern fathers. "Great Jove!" who does not cry as soon as he hears it? "but surely he spends on himself in proportion to his gains?" You would hardly believe cent a year, but Fufidius charged five times that rate, and took it in advance as in discounting, so that the sum actually received by the borrower was only forty per cent of the amount borrowed.

HORACE

quam sibi non sit amicus, ita ut pater ille, Terenti 20
fabula quem miserum gnato vixisse fugato
inducit, non se peius cruciaverit atque hic.

Si quis nunc quaerat "quo res haec pertinet?" illuc:
dum vitant stulti vitia, in contraria currunt.

Maltinus tunicis demissis ambulat; est qui 25
inguen ad obscenum subductis usque<sup>1</sup> facetus.
pastillos Rufillus olet, Gargonius hircum.

nil medium est. sunt qui nolint<sup>2</sup> tetigisse nisi illas quarum subsuta talos tegat instita veste:

contra alius nullam nisi olenti in fornice stantem. 30

quidam notus homo cum exiret fornice, "macte virtute esto" inquit sententia dia Catonis:

"nam simul ac venas inflavit taetra libido, huc<sup>3</sup> iuvenes aequum est descendere, non alienas permolere uxores." "nolim laudari," inquit 35
"sic me," mirator cunni Cupiennius albi.

Audire est operae pretium, procedere recte
qui moechis non voltis, ut omni parte laborent, utque illis multo corrupta dolore voluptas atque haec rara<sup>4</sup> cadat dura inter saepe pericla. 40
hic se praecipitem tecto dedit; ille flagellis
ad mortem caesus; fugiens hic decedit acrem praedonum in turbam, dedit hic pro corpore nummos, hunc perminxerunt calones; quin etiam illud

<sup>1</sup> Punctuation after usque, Vollmer.

<sup>2</sup> nolunt aD.

<sup>3</sup> hac, II.

<sup>4</sup> rata E.

---

<sup>a</sup> In the Heauton Timorumenos, or Self-Tormentor, the father, Menedemus, seized with remorse for his harshness to his son Clinias, punishes himself with hard labour.

<sup>b</sup> i.e., married women who dress as such.

how poor a friend he is to himself, so that the father whom Terence's play pictures as having lived in misery after banishing his son, never tortured himself worse than he.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>23</sup> Should one now ask, "What is the point of all this?" 'tis this: in avoiding a vice, fools run into its opposite. Maltinus walks with his garments trailing low; another, a man of fashion, wears them tucked up indecently as far as his waist. Rufillus smells like a scent-box, Gargonius like a goat. There is no middle course. Some men would deal only with women whose ankles are hidden by a robe with low-hanging flounce; <sup>b</sup> another is found only with such as live in a foul brothel. When from such a place a man he knew was coming forth, "A blessing on thy well-doing!" runs Cato's revered utterance; "for when shameful passion has swelled the veins, 'tis well that young men come down hither, rather than tamper with other men's wives." "I should not care to be praised on that count," says Cupiennius, an admirer of white-robed lechery.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>37</sup> It is worth your while,<sup>d</sup> ye who would have disaster wait on adulterers, to hear how on every side they fare ill, and how for them pleasure is marred by much pain, and, rare as it is, comes oft amid cruel perils. One man has thrown himself headlong from the roof; another has been flogged to death; a third, in his flight, has fallen into a savage gang of robbers; another has paid a price to save his life; another been abused by stable-boys; nay, once it

<sup>c</sup> Roman matrons dressed usually in white.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. Ennius:

audire est operae pretium procedere recte
qui rem Romanam Latiumque augescere voltis.

HORACE

accidit, ut quidam testis caudamque salacem 45
demeteret ferro. "iure" omnes: Galba negabat.

Tutior at quanto merx est in classe secunda, libertinarum dico, Sallustius in quas non minus insanit quam qui moechatur. at hic<sup>1</sup> si, qua res, qua ratio suaderet, quaque modeste 50
munifico<sup>2</sup> esse licet, vellet bonus atque benignus
esse, daret quantum satis esset, nec sibi damno dedecorique foret. verum hoc se amplectitur uno, hoc amat et laudat: "matronam nullam ego tango."
ut quondam Marsaeus, amator Originis ille, 55
qui patrum mimae donat fundumque larēque,
"nil fuerit mi" inquit "cum uxoribus umquam alienis."

verum est cum mimis, est cum meretricibus, unde
fama malum gravius quam res trahit. an tibi abunde personam satis est, non illud quicquid ubique 60
officit evitare? bonam deperdere famam,
rem patris oblimare, malum est ubicumque. quid interest in matrona, ancilla peccēsne<sup>3</sup> togata?

Villius in Fausta Syllae gener, hoc miser uno nomine deceptus, poenas dedit usque superque 65
quam satis est, pugnis caesus ferroque petitus, exclusus fore, cum Longareus foret intus.
huic si mutonis verbis mala tanta videnti

<sup>1</sup> at K: ut most MSS.

<sup>2</sup> munificum K<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> -ve MSS., Porph.

---

<sup>a</sup> Galba was at once an adulterer and (according to the scholiasts) a iuris consultus.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. of adulterer. The reputation of adulterer would come from association with matronae, but not with meretrices.

<sup>c</sup> Meretrices wore the toga (cf. v. 82), in contrast with the stola, worn by matrons, cf. v. 71. The ancilla is a slave-girl who had become a meretrix.

so befell that a man mowed down with the sword the testicles and lustful member. "That's the law," cry all, Galba dissenting.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>47</sup> But how much safer is trafficking in the second class—with freedwomen, I mean; after whom Sallustius runs just as wild as an adulterer. Yet he, if he wished to be good and generous, so far as his means and reason would direct, and so far as one might be liberal in moderation, would give a sum sufficient, not such as would mean for him shame and ruin. But no; because of this one thing he hugs himself, admires and plumes himself, because, says he, "I meddle with no matron." Just as was once said by Marsaeus, Origo's well-known lover, who gave his paternal home and farm to an actress: "Never may I have dealings with other men's wives!" But you have with actresses and with courtesans, through whom your name loses more than does your estate. Or is it enough for you to avoid the rôle,<sup>b</sup> but not the thing, which in any case works harm? To throw away a good name, to squander a father's estate, is at all times ruinous. What matters it, whether with matron you offend, or with long-gowned maid <sup>c</sup>?

<sup>64</sup> Villius, son-in-law of Sulla, was punished richly and more than enough because of Fausta <sup>d</sup>—by this name alone was the wretch misled—being smitten with the fist, assailed with the sword, and shut out of doors while Longarenus was within. If while facing such evils a man's mind were thus to plead on

<sup>a</sup> The reference is to a scandal of earlier days. Fausta, daughter of Sulla, was the wife of Milo, but had other lovers, among them Longarenus and Villius, who is called Sullae gener in derision. Fausta's name indicates her noble birth.

HORACE

diceret haec animus : " quid vis tibi ? numquid ego
a te

magno prognatum depono consule cunnum 70 velatumque stola, mea cum conferbuit ira ? "

quid responderet ? " magno patre nata puella est."

at quanto meliora monet pugnantiisque istis dives opis natura suae, tu si modo recte dispensare velis ac non fugienda petendis 75

immiscere. tuo vitio rerumne labores, nil referre putas ? quare, ne paeniteat te,

desine matronas sectarier,<sup>1</sup> unde laboris
plus haurire mali est quam ex re decerpere fructus.

nec magis huic inter niveos viridisque lapillos 80 (sit licet hoc, Cerinthe, tuum<sup>2</sup>) tenerum est femur aut

crus

rectius, atque etiam melius persaepe togatae est.<sup>3</sup>

adde huc quod mercem sine fucis gestat, aperte
quod venale habet ostendit, nec, si quid honesti est, iactat habetque palam, quaerit quo turpia celet. 85

regibus hic mos est, ubi equos mercantur : opertos<sup>4</sup> inspiciunt, ne, si facies, ut saepe, decora

molli fulta pede est, emptorem inducat hiantem, quod pulchrae clunes, breve quod caput, ardua cervix.

hoc illi recte : ne corporis optima Lyncei<sup>5</sup> 90
contemplare oculis, Hypsaea caecior illa

quae mala sunt spectes. " o crus, o brachia ! "
verum

<sup>1</sup> sectari matronas ABD.

<sup>2</sup> Housman (J. P. vol. xxxv.) conjectures aesque, Corinthe, tuum. <sup>3</sup> est omitted, most MSS.

<sup>4</sup> This verse begins a new sermo in some MSS. For regibus
Kiessling conjectured Threcibus.

<sup>5</sup> lynceis EK.

his passion's behalf ; " What wouldst thou ? Do I ever, when my rage is at its worst, ask you for a dame clad in a stola,<sup>a</sup> the offspring of a great consul ? " What would he answer ? " The girl is a noble father's child." But how much better—how utterly at variance with this—is the course that nature, rich in her own resources, prompts, if you would only manage wisely, and not confound what is to be avoided with what is to be desired ! Do you think it makes no difference, whether your trouble is due to your own fault or to circumstances ? Wherefore, that you may have no reason to repent, cease to court matrons, for thence one may derive pain and misery, rather than reap enjoyment in the reality. Though this may not be your opinion, Cerinthus, yet not softer or finer are a woman's limbs amidst snowy pearls and green emeralds—nay, often the advantage is with the strumpet. She, moreover, presents her wares without disguise ; what she has for sale she openly displays ; and if she has some charm, she does not boastfully show it off, while carefully concealing all unsightliness. This is the way with the rich when they buy horses ; they inspect them covered, so that if a beautiful shape, as often, is supported by a tender hoof, it may not take in the buyer, as he gapes at the comely haunches, the small head, the stately neck. In this they act wisely. So do not survey bodily perfections with the eyes of a Lynceus<sup>b</sup> and be blinder than Hypsaea, when you gaze upon deformities. " What a leg ! what arms ! " you cry,

<sup>a</sup> The stola was a long over-garment, caught in at the waist by a girdle.

<sup>b</sup> The keen-sighted Argonaut. Nothing is known of the blind Hypsaea.

HORACE

depugis, nasuta, brevi latere ac pede longo est.
 matronae praeter faciem nil cernere possis,
 cetera, ni Catia est, demissa veste tegentis. 95 si interdicta petes, vallo circumdata (nam te hoc facit insanum), multae tibi tum<sup>1</sup> officient<sup>2</sup> res, custodes, lectica, ciniffones, parasitae,
 ad talos stola demissa et circumdata palla, plurima quae invideant pure apparere tibi rem. 100
 altera, nil obstat; Cois tibi paenē vidēre est
 ut nudam, ne crure malo, ne sit pede turpi;
 metiri possis oculo latus. an tibi mavis insidias fieri pretiumque avellier ante quam mercem ostendi? "leporem venator ut alta 105
 in nive sectetur, positum sic tangere nolit," cantat et apponit "meus est amor huic similis; nam transvolat in medio posita et fugientia captat."
 hiscine versiculis speras tibi posse dolores atque aestus curasque gravis e pectore pelli<sup>3</sup>? 110
 Nonne, cupidinibus statuatur natura modum quem, quid latura sibi, quid sit dolitura negatum,
 quaerere plus prodest et inane abscindere<sup>4</sup> soldo?

<sup>1</sup> dum, II.
<sup>3</sup> tolli VBK.

<sup>2</sup> officiant φψλλ.
<sup>4</sup> abscedere B.

<sup>a</sup> A kind of transparent silk was made in the island of Cos.

<sup>b</sup> Horace makes use of an epigram of the poet Callimachus (Anthologia Palatina, xii. 102), in which the lover is compared to a hunter who will go to great trouble to catch game, but scorns it when it is caught and lies outstretched upon the ground (so Orelli). The Greek runs thus:

ὠγρευτής, Ἐπίκυδες, ἐν οὖρεσι πάντα λαγῶν
 διφῆ καὶ πάσης ἔχνια δορκαλίδος,

but there are thin hips, a long nose, a short waist and a long foot. In a matron one can see only her face, for unless she be a Catia, her long robe conceals all else. But if you seek forbidden charms that are invested with a rampart—for this it is that drives you crazy—many obstacles will then be in your way—attendants, the sedan, hairdressers, parasites, the robe dropping to the ankles, and, covered with a wrap, a thousand things which hinder you from a clear view. In the other—no obstacle. In her Coan silk <sup>a</sup> you may see her, almost as if naked, so that she may not have a poor leg, an unsightly foot; you may measure her whole form with your eye. Or would you rather have a trick played upon you and your money extorted before the wares are shown? The gallant sings how <sup>b</sup> “the huntsman pursues the hare mid the deep snow, but declines to touch it when thus outstretched,” and adds: “My love is like unto this, for it passes over what is served to all, and chases flying game.” Do you suppose that with verses such as these, sorrow and passion and the burden of care can be lifted from your breast?

<sup>iii</sup> Would it not be more profitable to ask what limit nature assigns to desires, what satisfaction she will give herself, what privation will cause her pain, and so to part the “void” from what is “solid”? <sup>c</sup> Or, when thirst parches your jaws, do you ask for cups of στίβη καὶ νιφετῷ κεχρημένος· ἦν δέ τις εἶπη, “τῇ, τόδε βέβληται θηρίον,” οὐκ ἔλαβεν.

 χούμους ἔρως τοιόσδε· τὰ μὲν φεύγοντα διώκειν
 οἶδε, τὰ δ' ἐν μέσσω κείμενα παρπέτεται.

The positum sic represents τόδε βέβληται θηρίον, while in medio posita translates ἐν μέσσω κείμενα.

<sup>c</sup> A reference to Epicurean physics, according to which the universe is composed of “void” (inane) and “solid” atoms.

HORACE

num, tibi cum fauces urit sitis, aurea quaeris pocula? num esuriens fastidis omnia praeter 115
pavonem rhombumque? tument tibi cum inguina,

num, si

ancilla aut verna est praesto puer, impetus in quem continuo fiat, malis tentigine rumpi?

non ego: namque parabilem amo Venerem facilem-
que. 119

illam "post paulo," "sed pluris," "si exierit vir," Gallis, hanc Philodemus ait sibi, quae neque magno stet pretio neque cunctetur cum est iussa venire.

candida rectaque sit; munda haecenus, ut neque longa
nec magis alba velit quam dat<sup>1</sup> natura videri.

haec ubi supposuit dextro corpus mihi laevum, 125

Ilia et Egeria est; do nomen quodlibet illi, nec vereor<sup>2</sup> ne, dum futuo, vir rure recurat,

ianua frangatur, latret canis, undique magno
pulsâ domûs strépitu resônēt, vepāllidâ<sup>3</sup> lecto

desiliat<sup>4</sup> mulier, miseram se conscia clamet, 130

cruribus haec metuat, doti deprensa, egomet mi.

discincta tunica fugiendum est et pede nudo,

ne nummi pereant aut puga aut denique fama.

deprendi miserum est: Fabio vel iudice vincam.

<sup>1</sup> det D.

<sup>2</sup> metuo, II.

<sup>3</sup> vae pallida mss.: vepallida known to Acron: ne pallida
Bentley.

<sup>4</sup> dissiliat, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> These were priests of Cybele, who mutilated themselves, cf. the Attis of Catullus. Horace is here quoting and summarizing an epigram by Philodemus, a Greek philosopher, and a client of the L. Calpurnius Piso who was assailed by

gold? When hungry, do you disdain everything save peacock and turbot? When your passions prove unruly, would you rather be torn with desire? I should not, for the pleasures I love are those easy to attain. "By and by," "Nay more," "If my husband goes out"—a woman who speaks thus is for the Galli,<sup>a</sup> says Philodemus; for himself he asks for one who is neither high-priced nor slow to come when bidden. She must be fair and straight, and only so far arranged that she will not wish to seem taller or fairer than nature allows. When she and I embrace, she is to me an Ilia or an Egeria<sup>b</sup>: I give her any name. No fears have I in her company, that a husband may rush back from the country, the door burst open, the dog bark, the house ring through and through with the din and clatter of his knocking; that the woman, white as a sheet, will leap away, the maid in league with her cry out in terror, she fearing for her limbs, her guilty mistress for her dowry, and I for myself. With clothes dishevelled and bare of foot, I must run off, dreading disaster in purse or person or at least repute. To be caught is an unhappy fate: this I could prove, even with Fabius<sup>c</sup> as umpire.

Cicero in his In Pisonem, where Philodemus is characterized in 68 ff. The epigram is discussed by G. L. Hendrickson in A.J.P. xxxix. (1918) pp. 27 ff., and by F. A. Wright, xlii. (1921) pp. 168, 169.

<sup>b</sup> Ilia, mother of Romulus, and Egeria, the nymph who inspired Numa, here represent women of highest rank.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 1. 14. This writer on Stoicism is said to have been detected in adultery.

ON MUTUAL FORBEARANCE

THE connexion between this satire and the preceding one is indicated at the outset, for the musician Tigellius is again introduced as a person who well illustrates the foibles and inconsistencies of a large class of people. But, says Horace, some one may ask me, "Have you yourself no faults?" Yes, I have, though they may not be as bad as his. I trust I am not like Maenius, who laid bare the faults of others, but overlooked his own. Self-satisfaction of this sort well deserves to be satirized. A man should examine himself and search out his own faults before criticizing others (1-37).

Think how blind is the lover to the defects of his beloved, or how tenderly a fond father treats his child's deformities. Even so we should be indulgent to the weaknesses of our friends. On the contrary, we often look upon real virtues as faults, calling for example modest behaviour stupidity, and simplicity boorishness. We must exercise mutual forbearance and also discriminate between failings, for a mere impropriety is not as serious as a heinous crime (38-95).

In fact the Stoic paradox that all offences are equal, "omnia peccata paria esse" (Cicero, De finibus, 30

SATIRES, I. III.

iv. 19. 55), besides being repugnant to common sense, is historically unsound, our social ethics being the result of a process of evolution. Yet your Stoic would punish all offences alike, if he were a king (96-124).

"If he were a king," did I say? Why, according to another of his paradoxes, the Stoic is already a king, even as he is rich and handsome and everything else that is good. "Yes," he would explain, "I am a king potentially, even as Hermogenes is a singer, though he does not open his lips." "Well," replies Horace, "I cannot see that your crown wins you esteem or saves you from ill-treatment. For myself, not being a philosopher, I will remain a private citizen, and live on terms of mutual forbearance with others" (124-142).

In striking contrast with Satire II., this one is kindly and genial in tone, and it would seem that the author was disarming criticism by his assurance that he was not disposed to be over-censorious, as we learn from ll. 63 ff. Horace has now become acquainted with Maecenas, and this improvement in his worldly prospects may to some extent account for the change of tone, and the doffing of the severity of Lucilian invective.

III.

Omnibus hoc vitium est cantoribus, inter amicos
ut numquam inducant animum cantare rogati, iniussi numquam desistant. Sardus habebat ille Tigellius hoc. Caesar, qui cogere posset, si peteret per amicitiam patris atque suam, non 5
quicquam proficeret; si collibuisset, ab ovo usque ad mala citaret "io Bacche<sup>1</sup>!" modo summa voce, modo hac, resonat<sup>2</sup> quae chordis quattuor ima.
nil aequale homini fuit illi: saepe velut qui currebat fugiens hostem, persaepe velut qui<sup>3</sup> 10 Iunonis sacra ferret; habebat saepe ducentos, saepe decem servos; modo reges atque tetrarchas, omnia magna loquens, modo "sit mihi mensa tripes et concha salis puri et toga, quae defendere frigus quamvis crassa queat." deciens centena dedisses 15
huic parco, paucis contento, quinque diebus
nil erat in oculis. noctes vigilabat ad ipsum mane, diem totum stertebat. nil fuit umquam sic impar sibi.

<sup>1</sup> Bacchae BE.

<sup>2</sup> resonet ψλλ.

<sup>3</sup> B omits l. 10; see C.R. xxx. p. 15.

<sup>a</sup> A dinner opened with the gustatio or promulsis, supposed to whet the appetite. In this eggs played a part. Fruit was served as a dessert just as with us.

<sup>b</sup> The refrain of a drinking-song.

<sup>c</sup> Editors commonly take summa and ima as defining the position of strings on the lyre, summa = ὑπάτη and ima = νήτη; the former therefore being "lowest," and the latter "highest," and voce being "the note." But see Clement L. Smith in C.R. xx. (1906) pp. 397 ff.

SATIRE III

All singers have this fault : if asked to sing among their friends they are never so inclined ; if unasked, they never leave off. That son of Sardinia, Tigellius, was of this sort. If Caesar, who might have forced him to comply, should beg him by his father's friendship and his own, he could make no headway. If the man took the fancy, then from the egg-course to the fruit<sup>a</sup> he would keep chanting "Io Bacche!"<sup>b</sup> now with highest voice and now with one responding in lowest pitch to the tetrachord.<sup>c</sup> There was nothing consistent in the fellow. Often he would run as if fleeing from a foe ; very often he would stalk as slowly as some bearer of Juno's holy offerings.<sup>d</sup> Often he would keep two hundred slaves, often only ten. Now he would talk of kings and tetrarchs, everything grand, and now he'd say, "Give me a three-legged table, a shell of clean salt, and a coat that, however coarse, can keep out the cold." Suppose you had given a million<sup>e</sup> to this thrifty gentleman, contented with so little ; in a week there was nothing in his pockets. All night, till dawn, he would stay awake ; all day would snore. Never was a creature so inconsistent.

<sup>a</sup> A reference to the κανηφόροι, or basket-bearers, who in religious processions walked with slow and stately stride.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. sesterces. The sum in question would amount, roughly speaking, to £10,000 or $50,000.

HORACE

Nunc aliquis dicat mihi : “ quid tu ? 19
nullane habes vitia ? ” immo alia et fortasse minora.<sup>1</sup> Maenius absentem Novium cum carperet, “ heus tu ” quidam ait, “ ignoras te, an ut ignotum dare nobis verba putas ? ” “ egomet mi ignosco ” Maenius
inquit.

stultus et improbus hic amor est dignusque notari.

Cum tua pervideas<sup>2</sup> oculis mala<sup>3</sup> lippus inunctis, 25
cur in amicorum vitiis tam cernis acutum quam aut aquila aut serpens Epidaurius ? at<sup>4</sup> tibi contra

evenit, inquirant vitia ut tua rursus et illi.

Iracundior est paulo, minus aptus acutis<sup>5</sup>
naribus horum hominum ; rideri possit eo, quod 30
rūsticius tōsō toga defluit et male laxus
in pede calceus haeret : at est bonus, ut melior vir
non alius quisquam, at tibi amicus, at ingenium ingens inculto latet hoc sub corpore.<sup>6</sup> denique te ipsum concute, num qua tibi vitiorum inseverit<sup>7</sup> olim 35
natura aut etiam consuetudo mala ; namque
neglectis urenda filix innascitur agris.

Illuc praevertamur, amatorem quod amicae<sup>8</sup>
turpia decipiunt caecum vitia, aut etiam ipsa haec 40
delectant, veluti Balbinum polypus Hagnae.
vellem in amicitia sic erraremus, et isti
errori nomen virtus<sup>9</sup> posuisset honestum.

<sup>1</sup> B omits l. 20.

<sup>2</sup> praevidas Bentley.

<sup>3</sup> male Bentley.

<sup>4</sup> ac MSS.

<sup>5</sup> aduncis Bentley.

<sup>6</sup> pectore, II.

<sup>7</sup> insederit, II.

<sup>8</sup> amici, II.

<sup>9</sup> victus Housman, in J.P. xviii. p. 3.

---

<sup>a</sup> Epidaurus was famous for the worship of Aesculapius, whose symbol was a serpent or δράκων, a word supposed to come from δέркоμαι, “ to see.”

<sup>19</sup> Now someone may say to me: "What about yourself? Have you no faults?" Why yes, but not the same, and perhaps lesser ones. When Maenius once was carping at Novius behind his back, "Look out, sir," said someone, "do you not know yourself? Or do you think you impose on us, as one we do not know?" "I take no note of myself," said Maenius. Such self-love is foolish and shameless, and deserves to be censured.

<sup>25</sup> When you look over your own sins, your eyes are rheumy and daubed with ointment; why, when you view the failings of your friends, are you as keen of sight as an eagle or as a serpent of Epidaurus<sup>a</sup>? But, on the other hand, the result for you is that they, too, in turn peer into your faults.

<sup>29</sup> "He is a little too hasty in temper, ill-suited to the keen noses of folk nowadays. He might awake a smile because his hair is cut in country style, his toga sits ill, and his loose shoe will hardly stay on his foot."<sup>b</sup> But he's a good man, none better; but he's your friend; but under that uncouth frame are hidden great gifts. In a word, give yourself a shaking and see whether nature, or haply some bad habit, has not at some time sown in you the seeds of folly; for in neglected fields there springs up bracken, which you must burn.

<sup>38</sup> Let us turn first to this fact, that the lover, in his blindness, fails to see his lady's unsightly blemishes, nay is even charmed with them, as was Balbinus with Hagna's wen. I could wish that we made the like mistake in friendship and that to such an error our ethics had given an honourable name. At any

<sup>b</sup> The scholiasts suggest that this may be a description either of Virgil or of Horace himself.

HORACE

at<sup>1</sup> pater ut gnati, sic nos debemus amici<sup>2</sup> si quod sit vitium non fastidire. strabonem appellat paetum pater, et pullum, male parvus 45
 si cui filius est, ut abortivus fuit olim Sisyphus; hunc varum distortis cruribus, illum balbutit scâurum pravis fultum male talis.
 parcius hic vivit: frugi dicatur. ineptus et iactantior hic paulo est: concinnus amicis 50
 postulat ut videatur. at est truculentior atque
 plus aequo liber: simplex fortisque habeatur.
 caldior est: acris inter numeretur. opinor,
 haec res et iungit, iunctos et servat amicos.
 at nos virtutes ipsas invertimus atque 55
 sincerum cupimus<sup>3</sup> vas incrustare.<sup>4</sup> probus quis
 nobiscum vivit, multum demissus homo: illi<sup>5</sup> tardo cognomen, pingui, damus. hic fugit omnis
 insidias nullique malo latus obdit apertum, cum genus hoc inter vitae versemur,<sup>6</sup> ubi acris 60
 invidia atque vigent ubi crimina: pro bene sano
 ac non incauto fictum astutumque vocamus.
 simplicior quis et est qualem me saepe libenter
 obtulerim tibi, Maecenas, ut<sup>7</sup> forte legentem aut tacitum impellat<sup>8</sup> quovis sermone molestus<sup>9</sup>: 65
 "communi sensu plane caret" inquit. eheu,

<sup>1</sup> at] ac BDEM Vollmer.

<sup>2</sup> amicis B.

<sup>3</sup> fugimus B: furimus Goth., Vollmer. <sup>4</sup> incurtare BDE.

<sup>5</sup> ille V.

<sup>6</sup> versemur V Bentley: versetur MSS.

<sup>7</sup> ut] aut or haut, II.

<sup>8</sup> impediat Bentley. Some editors punctuate after sermone.

<sup>9</sup> modestus, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> The pet names used, viz. paetus, pullus, varus, scaurus, are all adjectives denoting a less objectionable form of the defect referred to, but they were also cognomina in well-known family names. "Paetus" is associated with the Aelii and Papirii, "Pullus" with the Fabii and the Iunii, "Varus" with the Quintilii, and "Scaurus" with the rate, we should deal with a friend as a father with his child, and not be disgusted at some blemish. If a boy squints, his father calls him "Blinky"; if his son is sadly puny, like misbegotten Sisyphus of former days, he styles him "Chickabiddy." One with crooked legs he fondly calls "Cruikshank," and one that can hardly stand on twisted ankles, "Curly-legs." ✓ Is a friend somewhat close? Let us call him thrifty. Does another fail in tact and show off a bit too much? He wants his friends to think him agreeable. Or is he somewhat bluff and too outspoken? Let him pass for frank and fearless. Hot-headed is he? Let him be counted a man of spirit. This, I take it, is how to make friends, and to keep them when made. But we turn virtues themselves upside down, and want to soil a clean vessel. Does there live among us an honest soul, a truly modest fellow? We nickname him slow and stupid. Does another shun every snare and offer no exposed side to malice, seeing that we live in that kind of a world where keen envy and slanders are so rife? Instead of his good sense and prudence we speak of his craftiness and insincerity. Is one somewhat simple and such as often I have freely shown myself to you, Maecenas, interrupting you perhaps while reading or thinking with some annoying chatter? "He is quite devoid of social tact,"<sup>b</sup> we say. Ah, how Aemilii and Aurelii. For the passage as a whole we may compare Plato, Rep. v. 474 D, Lucretius, iv. 1160 ff., Ovid, Ars Am. ii. 657; and among modern writers, Molière, Misanthrope, Act ii. Sc. 5, e.g. "Ils comptent les défauts pour des perfections."

<sup>b</sup> The expression communis sensus does not mean precisely the same as the phrase we have derived from it, viz. "common sense." It is rather social sense, a sense of propriety in dealing with our fellows, or what the French call savoir faire.

HORACE

quam temere in nosmet legem sancimus iniquam !
 nam vitiis nemo sine nascitur : optimus ille est,
 qui minimis urgetur. amicus dulcis, ut aequum est,
 cum mea compenset vitiis bona, pluribus hisce, 70
 si modo plura mihi bona sunt, inclinet, amari
 si volet : hac lege in trutina ponetur eadem.

qui ne tuberibus propriis offendant amicum
 postulat, ignoscet<sup>1</sup> verrucis illius : aequum est
 peccatis veniam poscentem reddere rursus. || 75

Denique, quatenus excidi penitus vitium irae,<sup>2</sup> cetera item nequeunt stultis haerentia, cur non ponderibus modulisque suis ratio utitur, ac res
 ut quaeque est, ita suppliciiis delicta coercet ?
 si quis eum servum, patinam qui tollere iussus 80
 semesos piscis tepidumque ligurrierit ius,
 in cruce suffigat, Labeone insanior inter
 sanos dicatur. quanto hoc<sup>3</sup> furiosius atque maius peccatum est : paulum deliquit amicus, quod nisi concedas, habere insuavis : acerbus<sup>4</sup> 85
 odisti et fugis ut Rusonem debitor aeris, qui nisi, cum tristes misero venere Kalendae,
 mercedem aut nummos unde unde extricat, amaras
 porrecto iugulo historias captivus ut audit.
 comminxit lectum potus, mensave catillum 90

<sup>1</sup> ignoscat B.

<sup>2</sup> B omits 76-80.

<sup>3</sup> hoc omitted EM : deleted in V.

<sup>4</sup> Some punctuate after acerbus ; so Orelli and Ritter.

<sup>a</sup> According to the Stoics only the ideal sage, the sapiens, is excepted from the class of stulti. Horace places himself in the majority. <sup>b</sup> Labeo was a crazy jurisconsult.

<sup>c</sup> Ruso, the usurer, has literary aspirations and writes histories. The fate of the debtor, who is in Ruso's power, and must therefore listen while Ruso reads to him from his works, is humorously regarded as most horrible. Cf. Macaulay's story of the criminal, who went to the galleys rather than read the history of Guicciardini. ("Burleigh

lightly do we set up an unjust law to our own harm ! For no living wight is without faults : the best is he who is burdened with the least. My kindly friend must, as is fair, weigh my virtues against my faults, if he wishes to gain my love, and must turn the scales in their favour as being the more numerous—if only my virtues are the more numerous. On that condition he shall be weighed in the same scale. One who expects his friend not to be offended by his own warts will pardon the other's pimples. It is but fair that one who craves indulgence for failings should grant it in return.

<sup>76</sup> In fine, since the fault of anger, and all the other faults that cleave to fools<sup>a</sup> cannot be wholly cut away, why does not Reason use her own weights and measures, and visit offences with punishment suited to each ? If one were to crucify a slave who, when bidden to take away a dish, has greedily licked up the half-eaten fish and its sauce, now cold, sane men would call him more insane than Labeo.<sup>b</sup> How much madder and grosser a sin is this : a friend has committed a slight offence, which you would be thought ungracious not to pardon : you hate him bitterly and shun him, as Ruso is shunned by his debtor, who, poor wretch, if at the coming of the sad Kalends he cannot scrape up from some quarter either interest or principal, must offer his throat like a prisoner of war and listen to his captor's dreary histories !<sup>c</sup> What if in his cups my friend has wet the couch or knocked off the table a bowl once and his "Times" in Critical and Historical Essays.) Cf. Juvenal's

mille pericula saevae
urbis et Augusto recitantes mense poetas (Sat. iii. 8).

HORACE

Euandri manibus tritum deiecit<sup>1</sup> : ob hanc rem, aut positum ante mea<sup>2</sup> quia pullum in parte catini sustulit esuriens, minus hoc iucundus amicus sit mihi ? quid faciam si furtum fecerit, aut si prodiderit commissa fide sponsumve negarit ? 95
quis paria esse fere placuit peccata, laborant cum ventum ad verum est : sensus moresque repugnant

atque ipsa Utilitas, iusti prope mater et aequi.

Cum prorepserunt primis animalia terris, mutum et turpe pecus, glandem atque cubilia propter unguibus et pugnīs, dein fustibus, atque ita porro 101
pugnabant armis, quae post fabricaverat usus, donec verba, quibus voces sensusque notarent,<sup>3</sup>
nominaque invenere ; dehinc absistere bello, oppida coeperunt munire et ponere leges, 105
ne quis fur esset, neu latro, neu quis adulter.
nam fuit ante Helenam cunnus taeterrima belli
causa, sed ignotis perierunt mortibus illi, quos venerem incertam rapiētis more ferarum viribus editior caedebat ut in grege taurus. 110
iura inventa metu iniusti fateare necesse est, tempora si fastosque velis evolvere mundi.
nec Natura potest iusto secernere iniquum, dividit ut bona diversis, fugienda petendis ;
nec vincet Ratio hoc, tantundem ut peccet idemque

<sup>1</sup> proiecit B.

<sup>2</sup> me, II: B omits 92, as well as 95-100, and 111-124.

<sup>3</sup> quibus sensus, vocesque, notarent Housman (cf. Lucr. v. 1041 ff.)

<sup>a</sup> i.e. of great antiquity and consequently very valuable.

<sup>b</sup> This was a doctrine of the Stoics ; cf. Cicero, De fin. iv. 19. 55, "recte facta omnia aequalia, omnia peccata paria esse."

<sup>c</sup> Appeal is here made to the Epicureans, whose moral philosophy rested on a distinctly utilitarian basis.

fingered by Evander,<sup>a</sup> is he for such offence, or because when hungry he snatched up first a pullet served on my side of the dish, to be less pleasing in my eyes? What shall I do if he commits a theft, or betrays a trust, or disowns his bond? Those whose creed is that all sins are much on a par<sup>b</sup> are at a loss when they come to face facts. Feelings and customs rebel, and so does Expedience herself, the mother, we may say, of justice and right.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>99</sup> When living creatures<sup>d</sup> crawled forth upon primeval earth, dumb, shapeless beasts, they fought for their acorns and lairs with nails and fists, then with clubs, and so on step by step with the weapons which need had later forged, until they found words and names<sup>e</sup> wherewith to give meaning to their cries and feelings. Thenceforth they began to cease from war, to build towns, and to frame laws that none should thief or rob or commit adultery. For before Helen's day a wench was the most dreadful cause of war, but deaths unknown to fame were theirs whom, snatching fickle love in wild-beast fashion, a man stronger in might struck down, like the bull in a herd. If you will but turn over the annals and records of the world, you must needs confess that justice was born of the fear of injustice.<sup>f</sup> Between right and wrong Nature can draw no such distinction as between things gainful and harmful, what is to be sought and what is to be shunned; nor will Reason ever prove this, that the sin is one and the

<sup>a</sup> The doctrine of the evolution of society, as here set forth, is based on Lucretius, De rerum natura, v. 780 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Or "verbs and nouns," the two main divisions of human speech. Cf. A.P. 234-5.

<sup>c</sup> According to the utilitarian theory of ethics, the sense of right and wrong is not innate in us.

HORACE

qui teneros caules alieni fregerit horti 116
 et qui nocturnus sacra divum<sup>1</sup> legerit. adsit regula, peccatis quae poenas inroget aequas, ne scutica dignum horribili sectere flagello.
 nam ut ferula caedas meritum maiora subire 120
 verbera non vereor, cum dicas esse pares res
 furta latrociniiis et magnis parva mineris falce recisurum simili te, si tibi regnum permittant homines.

Si dives, qui sapiens est,
 et sutor bonus et solus formosus et est rex, 125
 cur optas quod habes? "non nosti quid pater" inquit
 "Chrysippus dicat: sapiens crepidas sibi numquam nec soleas fecit; sutor tamen est sapiens." qui<sup>2</sup>?
 "ut quamvis tacet Hermogenes cantor tamen atque optimus est modulator; ut Alfenus vafer omni 130
 abiecto instrumento artis clausaque taberna<sup>3</sup> tonsor<sup>4</sup> erat, sapiens operis sic optimus omnis
 est opifex solus, sic rex." vellunt tibi barbam lascivi pueri; quos tu nisi fuste coerces, urgeris turba circum te stante miserque<sup>5</sup> 135
 rumperis et latras, magnorum maxime regum.

<sup>1</sup> divum sacra aK.

<sup>2</sup> qui B: quo other MSS.

<sup>3</sup> ustrina V.

<sup>4</sup> tonsor V: sutor MSS., Porph.

<sup>5</sup> Beginning with 135, B is lacking up to the end of Book II. of the Epistles.

---

<sup>a</sup> For another interpretation see T. G. Tucker in C.R. 1920, p. 156.

<sup>b</sup> The sixth Stoic Paradox according to Cicero, is "solum sapientem esse divitem." The Stoics held that the truly wise man or philosopher was perfect: he was therefore rich, as well as beautiful, accomplished, and a king among men. Horace ridicules these claims here and elsewhere, 42

same to cut young cabbages in a neighbour's garden and to steal by night the sacred emblems of the gods. Let us have a rule to assign just penalties to offences, lest you flay with the terrible scourge what calls for the strap. For <sup>a</sup> as to your striking with the rod one who deserves sterner measures, I am not afraid of that, when you say that theft is on a par with highway robbery, and when you threaten to prune away all crimes, great and small, with the same hook, if men would but give you royal power.

<sup>124</sup> If the wise man is rich,<sup>b</sup> and a good cobbler, and alone handsome and a king, why crave what you already have? <sup>c</sup> "You do not know," he answers, "what our father Chrysippus<sup>d</sup> means. The wise man has never made himself shoes or sandals; yet the wise man is a cobbler." How so? "As Hermogenes, however silent, is still the best of singers and musicians; as shrewd Alfenus, after tossing aside every tool of his art and closing his shop, was a barber<sup>e</sup>; so the wise man—he alone—is the best workman of every craft, so is he king." Mischievous boys pluck at your beard, and unless you keep them off with your staff, you are jostled by the crowd that surrounds you, while you, poor wretch, snarl and burst with rage, O mightiest of mighty

as in Epist. i. 1. 106. Cf. the account of the wise man of the Stoics given in Plutarch, Mor. p. 1057, and for St. Paul's application of the principle see 2 Cor. 6. 4-10.

<sup>a</sup> The Stoic has just admitted that he is not a king.

<sup>d</sup> Chrysippus was regarded as the second founder of Stoicism, the first being Zeno.

<sup>e</sup> The reading tonsor is preferred to sutor. As the Stoic tries to prove that the wise man is a cobbler, he naturally turns elsewhere for illustrations, e.g. to Hermogenes the musician, and to Alfenus the barber.

HORACE

ne longum faciam : dum tu quadrante lavatum
rex ibis neque te quisquam stipator ineptum praeter Crispinum sectabitur, et mihi dulces ignoscent, si quid peccaro stultus, amici, inque vicem illorum patiar delicta libenter,
privatusque magis vivam te rege beatus.

140

---

<sup>a</sup> Like a Persian king, βασιλεὺς βασιλέων.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 1. 120.

SATIRES, I. III. 137-142

kings !<sup>a</sup> In short, while you, a king, go to your penny bath, and no escort attends you except crazy Crispinus,<sup>b</sup> my kindly friends will pardon me if I, your foolish man,<sup>c</sup> commit some offence, and in turn I shall gladly put up with their shortcomings, and in my private station shall live more happily than Your Majesty.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. stultus, as the Stoics used it, the opposite of sapiens.

IV

A DEFENCE OF SATIRE

THE writers of Old Attic Comedy assailed the vicious with the utmost freedom. In Roman literature, Lucilius shows the same spirit and boldness, but his metrical forms are different, and his verse is uncouth. He was careless and verbose, more interested in the quantity than in the quality of his work (1-13).

Similar in this last respect is Crispinus, who challenges the poet to a scribbling contest, but Horace declines to compete with such poetasters, even as he refuses to emulate the self-satisfied Fannius by reading his verses in public, because this kind of writing is not popular. Men do not like to have their weaknesses exposed. "Give such a poet a wide berth," they cry (14-38).

"Listen to my defence," says Horace. "In the first place, a man who composes verses as I do, verses that are really more like conversation, should not be called a poet. The true poet has imaginative power and lofty utterance. This is why the question has been raised whether comedy is poetry, for even in its most spirited passages, as rendered on the stage, we are really dealing with pure conversation, such as would be suitable to similar scenes in daily life" (38-56).

"So it is with the verses of Lucilius and my own. Take away the metrical element, change the word-order, and you have plain prose. But the question whether satire is poetry must be postponed. At present let us consider the question of its unpopularity" (56-65).

SATIRES, I. iv.

" You look upon me as an informer, but even if you are a rogue I am no informer. My friends will acquit me of such a charge. I am not writing for the general public, and my object is not to give pain. Yet it is my habit to observe the conduct of others, and to profit thereby, for I was trained to do so by my father, and have always continued the practice. To be sure, I jot down my thoughts, but what of that? Nowadays everybody writes, and you, my critic, willy-nilly, will take to writing yourself" (65-143).

On the appearance of his first Satires (and it is to be noticed that the carefully chosen subjunctive habeat in l. 71 does not preclude their publication), the poet's critics had accused Horace of being a malevolent scandal-monger. They also contrasted him unfavourably with Lucilius, who in his open warfare used the weapons of Old Comedy, was familiar with the Greek moralists and philosophers, and had the pen of a ready writer. In his reply, Horace maintains that his own satire is not personal, but rather social and general in its application. He does not indulge in the invective of Old Comedy, but rather follows the New in spirit as well as in style. His teacher in morals, if not a great philosopher (cf. sapiens, l. 115), was a representative of the fine, old-fashioned Roman virtues, even his own father. As for the copiousness of Lucilius, that was his predecessor's chief fault, which he himself would carefully avoid.

This is one of the early Satires, and in view of the citation in l. 92 is to be associated closely with the Second. As there is no reference to Maecenas, it was probably composed before the poet's introduction to the statesman in 38 B.C.

IV.

Eupolis atque Cratinus Aristophanesque poetae
 atque alii, quorum comoedia prisca virorum est,
 si quis erat dignus describi, quod malus ac fur,
 quod moechus foret aut sicarius aut alioqui famosus, multa cum libertate notabant. 5
 hinc omnis pendet Lucilius, hosce secutus mutatis tantum pedibus numerisque ; facetus, emunctae naris, durus componere versus.
 nam fuit hoc vitiosus : in hora saepe ducentos,
 ut magnum, versus dictabat stans pede in uno ; 10
 cum flueret lutulentus, erat quod tollere velles ;
 garrulus atque piger scribendi ferre laborem,
 scribendi recte : nam ut multum, nil moror. ecce, Crispinus minimo me provocat : “ accipe, si vis, accipiam<sup>1</sup> tabulas : detur<sup>2</sup> nobis locus, hora, 15
 custodes ; videamus uter plus scribere possit.”
 di bene fecerunt, inopis me quodque pusilli finxerunt animi, raro et perpauca loquentis.
 at tu conclusas hircinis follibus auras usque laborantis, dum ferrum molliat ignis, 20
 ut mavis, imitare.

<sup>1</sup> accipe iam, I, but not in harmony with hora.      <sup>2</sup> dentur, II.

<sup>a</sup> For the emphasis on poetae (denied by Ullman, loc. cit. p. 115) see Epist. ii. 1. 247.

<sup>b</sup> Proverbial for “doing without effort.”

<sup>c</sup> For Crispinus see Sat. i. 1. 120. He offers to bet a

SATIRE IV

Eupolis and Cratinus and Aristophanes, true poets,<sup>a</sup> and the other good men to whom Old Comedy belongs, if there was anyone deserving to be drawn as a rogue and thief, as a rake or cut-throat, or as scandalous in any other way, set their mark upon him with great freedom. It is on these that Lucilius wholly hangs; these he has followed, changing only metre and rhythm. Witty he was, and of keen-scented nostrils, but harsh in framing his verse. Herein lay his fault: often in an hour, as though a great exploit, he would dictate two hundred lines while standing, as they say, on one foot.<sup>b</sup> In his muddy stream there was much that you would like to remove. He was wordy, and too lazy to put up with the trouble of writing—of writing correctly, I mean; for as to quantity, I let that pass. See, Crispinus challenges me at long odds<sup>c</sup>: “Take your tablets, please; I’ll take mine. Let a place be fixed for us, and time and judges; let us see which can write the most.” The gods be praised for fashioning me of meagre wit and lowly spirit, of rare and scanty speech! But do you, for such is your taste, be like the air shut up in goat-skin bellows, and ever puffing away until the fire softens the iron.

large sum against a small one on my part. Bentley conjectured nummo for minimo, i.e. “bets me a sesterce,” that being all his poverty would allow.

HORACE

Beatus Fannius ultro

delatis capsis et imagine, cum mea nemo scripta legat volgo recitare timentis ob hanc rem, quod sunt quos genus hoc minime iuvat, utpote pluris
 culpari dignos. quemvis media elige<sup>1</sup> turba : 25
 aut ob avaritiam<sup>2</sup> aut misera<sup>3</sup> ambitione laborat.
 hic nuptarum insanit amoribus, hic puerorum ;
 hunc capit argenti splendor ; stupet Albius aere ;
 hic mutat merces surgente a sole ad eum quo vespertina tepet<sup>4</sup> regio ; quin per mala praeceps 30
 fertur uti pulvis collectus turbine, ne quid summa deperdat metuens aut ampliè ut rem :
 omnes hi metuunt versus, odere poetas.

“ faenum habet in cornu : longe fuge ! dummodo risum

excutiat sibi, non hic<sup>5</sup> cuiquam parcet amico ; 35
 et quodcumque semel chartis illeverit, omnis gestiet a furno redeuntis scire lacuque et pueros et anus.”

Agedum, pauca accipe contra.
 primum ego me illorum, dederim quibus esse poetas,<sup>6</sup>
 excerpam numero : neque enim concludere versum 40
 dixeris esse satis ; neque, si qui scribat uti nos
 sermoni propiora, putes hunc esse poetam.

<sup>1</sup> erue K, Vollmer : eripe 3 Bland. : arripe Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> ab avaritia. <sup>3</sup> miser K, II. <sup>4</sup> patet, II.

<sup>5</sup> non non, II, adopted by Vollmer and Garrod.

<sup>6</sup> poetis R and scholia on Sat. i. 6. 25 ; so Vollmer.

---

<sup>a</sup> Fannius, a petty poet, brought his writings (kept in capsae or cylindrical boxes), together with his portrait, into prominence, but in what way he did so is now unknown.

<sup>21</sup> Happy fellow, Fannius, who has delivered his books and bust unasked! <sup>a</sup> My writings no one reads, and I fear to recite them in public, the fact being that this style <sup>b</sup> is abhorrent to some, inasmuch as most people merit censure. Choose anyone from amid a crowd: he is suffering either from avarice or some wretched ambition. One is mad with love for somebody's wife, another for boys. Here is one whose fancy the sheen of silver catches; Albius <sup>c</sup> dotes on bronzes; another trades his wares from the rising sun to regions warmed by his evening rays; nay, through perils he rushes headlong, like dust gathered up by a whirlwind, fearful lest he lose aught of his total, or fail to add to his wealth. All of these dread verses and detest the poet: "He carries hay on his horns, <sup>d</sup> give him a wide berth. Provided he can raise a laugh for himself, he will spare not a friend, and whatever he has once scribbled on his sheets he will rejoice to have all know, all the slaves and old dames as they come home from bakehouse and pond." <sup>e</sup>

<sup>38</sup> Come now, listen to a few words in answer. First I will take my own name from the list of such as I would allow to be poets. For you would not call it enough to round off a verse, nor would you count anyone poet who writes, as I do, lines more. Probably he presented them to private libraries. At this time the only public library in Rome was the one founded by Asinius Pollio in 38 B.C., and the only living writer whose works were admitted to it was Varro. Another view is that Fannius's admirers presented the poet with book-cases and bust.

<sup>b</sup> i.e., Satire.

<sup>c</sup> The extravagance of Albius impoverishes his son (l. 109).

<sup>d</sup> Dangerous cattle were thus distinguished.

<sup>e</sup> i.e. the common people, as they went to get bread from the public bakery and water from the public tanks. Agrippa set up seven hundred lacus or reservoirs in Rome.

HORACE

ingenium cui sit, cui mens divini<sup>1</sup>or atque os magna sonaturum, des nominis huius honorem.
 idcirco quidam Comoedia necne poema 45
 esset quaesivere, quod acer spiritus ac vis nec verbis nec rebus inest, nisi quod pede certo differt sermoni, sermo merus. "at pater ardens saevit, quod meretrice nepos insanus<sup>1</sup> amica
 filius uxorem grandi<sup>2</sup> cum dote recuset, 50
 ebrius et, magnum quod dedecus, ambulet ante noctem cum facibus." numquid Pomponius istis audiret leviora, pater si viveret? ergo non satis est puris<sup>3</sup> versum perscribere verbis, quem si dissolvas, quivis stomachetur eodem 55
 quo personatus pacto pater. his, ego quae nunc, olim quae scripsit Lucilius, eripias si tempora certa modosque, et quod prius ordine
 verbum<sup>4</sup> est,
 posterius facias, praeponens ultima primis,
 non, ut si solvas "postquam Discordia taetra 60 Belli ferratos postis portasque refregit," invenias etiam disiecti membra poetae.

Hactenus haec : alias iustum sit necne poema, nunc illud tantum quaeram, meritone tibi sit suspectum genus hoc scribendi. Sulcius acer 65
 ambulat et Caprius, rauci male cumque libellis, magnus uterque timor latronibus : at bene si quis
 et vivat puris manibus, contemnat utrumque.

<sup>1</sup> insanit, II.   <sup>2</sup> grandem, II.   <sup>3</sup> pueris, II.   <sup>4</sup> versum, II.

<sup>a</sup> Who Pomponius was is unknown, but in real life he corresponds to the prodigal in the play, and the language used by his father under the circumstances would be similar to that in the scene from Comedy.

<sup>b</sup> The passage cited is from Ennius and refers to the temple of Janus, which was opened in time of war. It is imitated in Virgil, Aen. vii. 622.

akin to prose. If one has gifts inborn, if one has a soul divine and tongue of noble utterance, to such give the honour of that name. Hence some have questioned whether Comedy is or is not poetry ; for neither in diction nor in matter has it the fire and force of inspiration, and, save that it differs from prose-talk in its regular beat, it is mere prose. "But," you say, "there is the father storming in passion because his spendthrift son, madly in love with a wanton mistress, rejects a wife with large dower, and in drunken fit reels abroad—sad scandal—with torches in broad daylight." Would Pomponius hear a lecture less stern than this, were his father alive ? <sup>a</sup> And so 'tis not enough to write out a line of simple words such that, should you break it up, any father whatever would rage in the same fashion as the father in the play. Take from the verses which I am writing now, or which Lucilius wrote in former days, their regular beat and rhythm—change the order of the words, transposing the first and the last—and it would not be like breaking up :

When foul Discord's din War's posts and gates of bronze had broken in, where, even when he is dismembered, you would find the limbs of a poet.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>63</sup> Of this enough. Some other time we'll see whether this kind of writing is true poetry or not. To-day the only question I'll ask is this, whether you are right in viewing it with distrust. Keen-scented Sulcius and Caprius stalk about, horribly hoarse and armed with writs, both a great terror to robbers, but if a man is honest of life and his hands

HORACE

ut sis tu similis Caeli Birrique latronum, non ego sim<sup>1</sup> Capri neque Sulci : cur metuas me ? 70
 nulla taberna meos habeat neque pila libellos, quis manus insudet volgi Hermogenisque Tigelli ;
 nec<sup>2</sup> recito cuiquam nisi amicis, idque coactus,
 non ubivis coramve quibuslibet. in medio qui scripta foro recitent, sunt multi, quique lavantes : 75
 suave locus voci resonat conclusus. inanis
 hoc iuvat, haud illud quaerentis, num sine sensu, tempore num faciant alieno.

“ Laedere gaudes ”

inquit,<sup>3</sup> “ et hoc studio pravus facis.” Unde petikum hoc in me iacis ? est auctor quis denique eorum 80
 vixi cum quibus ? absentem qui rodit amicum, qui non defendit alio culpante, solutos
 qui captat risus hominum famamque dicacis, fingere qui non visa potest, commissa tacere
 qui nequit : hic niger est, hunc tu, Romane, caveto. 85
 saepe tribus lectis videas cenare quaternos,
 e quibus unus<sup>4</sup> amet<sup>5</sup> quavis aspergere cunctos
 praeter eum qui praebet aquam ; post hunc quoque potus,
 condita cum verax aperit praecordia Liber.

<sup>1</sup> sum Porph.    <sup>2</sup> non, II.    <sup>3</sup> inquis M, II.    <sup>4</sup> imus, II.

<sup>5</sup> amet 1 Bland., Bentley : avet mss. ; a subjunctive is necessary here.

<sup>a</sup> Sulcius and Caprius are commonly supposed to have been professional informers, hoarse from bawling in the courts, but Ullman (A.P.A. xlviii. p. 117) takes them to be contemporary satirists, who recite their long-winded poems and carry about copies for free distribution.

<sup>b</sup> For Tigellius see Sat. i. 3. 129. The scholiasts identify him with the Tigellius of Sat. i. 2. 3, and i. 3. 4, and Ullman convincingly upholds this view (C.P. x. pp. 270 ff.). He was now dead, but Horace treats him as the poet of the volgus. See note on Sat. i. 10. 90. Book-stalls clean, he may scorn them both.<sup>a</sup> Though you be like Caelius and Birrius, the robbers, I need not be like Caprius or Sulcius : why should you fear me ? I want no stall or pillar to have my little works, so that the hands of the crowd—and Hermogenes Tigellius<sup>b</sup>—may sweat over them. Nor do I recite them to any save my friends, and then only when pressed—not anywhere or before any hearers. Many there are who recite their writings in the middle of the Forum, or in the baths. How pleasantly the vaulted space echoes the voice ! That delights the frivolous, who never ask themselves this, whether what they do is in bad taste or out of season.

<sup>78</sup> “ You like to give pain,” says one, “ and you do so with spiteful intent.” Where have you found this missile to hurl at me ? Does anyone whatever with whom I have lived vouch for it ? The man who backbites an absent friend ; who fails to defend him when another finds fault ; the man who courts the loud laughter of others, and the reputation of a wit ; who can invent what he never saw ; who cannot keep a secret—that man is black of heart ; of him beware, good Roman. Often on each of the three couches you may see four at dinner,<sup>c</sup> among whom one loves to bespatter in any way everyone present except the host who provides the water, and later him as well, when he has well drunk and the truthful god of free speech<sup>d</sup> unlocks the heart’s secrets. were usually in arcades, the pillars of which were doubtless used for advertising the books within. One may compare the Parisian kiosques.

<sup>e</sup> Three was the usual number, so that this was a large party. Cicero speaks of five as a great crush : Graeci stipati, quini in lectulis (In Pis. 27. 67).

<sup>d</sup> The god Liber was identified with Bacchus. Cf. the proverbs οἶνος καὶ ἀλάθεια (Alcaeus), and in vino veritas.

HORACE

hic tibi comis et urbanus liberque videtur, 90
 infesto nigris. ego si risi, quod ineptus
 pastillos Rufillus olet, Gargonius hircum, lividus et mordax videor tibi? mentio si quae<sup>1</sup>
 de Capitolini<sup>2</sup> furtis iniecta Petilli
 te coram fuerit, defendas ut tuus est mos : 95
 " me Capitolinus convictore usus amicoque
 a puero est, causaque mea permulta rogatus fecit, et incolumis laetor quod vivit in urbe ;
 sed tamen admiror quo pacto iudicium illud fugerit." hic nigrae sucus lolliginis, haec est 100
 aerugo mera. quod vitium procul afore chartis atque animo prius, ut<sup>3</sup> si quid promittere de me possum aliud vere, promitto.

Liberius si

dixero quid, si forte iocosius, hoc mihi iuris cum venia dabis. insuevit pater optimus hoc me, 105
 ut fugerem exemplis vitiorum quaeque notando.
 cum me hortaretur, parce frugaliter atque viverem uti contentus eo, quod mi ipse parasset :
 " nonne vides, Albi ut male vivat filius, utque Baius inops? magnum documentum, ne patriam rem perdere quis velit." a<sup>4</sup> turpi meretricis amore 111 cum deterreret : " Scetani dissimilis sis."
 ne sequerer moechas, concessa cum venere uti possem : " deprensi non bella est fama Treboni,"

<sup>1</sup> qua KM, II.

<sup>2</sup> capitolinis DE, II.

<sup>3</sup> animo, prius ut, (= ut prius) Housman. <sup>4</sup> aut E, II: at M.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cited from Sat. i. 2. 27. Hic in l. 90 is Lucilius, who must have described such a banqueting-scene (ll. 86-89) in the first person. See Sat. i. 10. 65, and note.

<sup>b</sup> The crime of which Petillius is said to have been accused, that of stealing the gold crown of Jupiter on the Capitol, was a proverbial one, as is seen from the allusions 56

Such a man you think genial and witty and frank—you who hate the black of heart. As for me, if I have had my laugh because silly “Rufillus smells like a scent-box, Gargonius like a goat,”<sup>a</sup> do you think I am a spiteful, snappish cur? If in your presence somebody hinted at the thefts of Petillius Capitolinus, you would defend him after your fashion: “Capitolinus has been a comrade and friend of mine from boyhood; much has he done to serve me when asked, and I rejoice that he is alive and out of danger here in Rome—but still I do wonder how he got out of that trial.”<sup>b</sup> Here is the very ink of the cuttlefish; here is venom unadulterate. That such malice shall be far from my pages, and first of all from my heart, I pledge myself, if there is aught that I can pledge with truth.

<sup>103</sup> If in my words I am too free, perchance too light, this bit of liberty you will indulgently grant me. ’Tis a habit the best of fathers taught me, for, to enable me to steer clear of follies, he would brand them, one by one, by his examples.<sup>c</sup> Whenever he would encourage me to live thriftily, frugally, and content with what he had saved for me, “Do you not see,” he would say, “how badly fares young Albius,<sup>d</sup> and how poor is Baius? A striking lesson not to waste one’s patrimony!” When he would deter me from a vulgar amour, “Don’t be like Scetanus.” And to prevent me from courting another’s wife, when I might enjoy a love not forbidden, “Not pretty,” he would say, to it in Plautus, e.g. Trinummus 83, Menaechmi 941. The cognomen Capitolinus gave a handle to his assailants.

<sup>e</sup> The hoc of l. 105 refers to Horace’s freedom of speech (liberius si dixero), while the clause ut fugerem expresses the father’s purpose with notando.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. l. 28 above.

HORACE

aiebat. " sapiens, vitatu quidque petitu 115 sit melius, causas reddet tibi : mi satis est, si traditum ab antiquis morem servare tuamque, dum custodis eges, vitam famamque tueri
 incolumem possum ; simul ac duraverit aetas membra animumque tuum, nabis sine cortice." sic me formabat puerum dictis, et sive iubebat, 121 ut facerem quid, " habes auctorem quo facias hoc," unum ex iudicibus selectis<sup>1</sup> obiebat ;
 sive vetabat, " an hoc inhonestum et inutile factu<sup>2</sup>
 necne sit addubites, flagret rumore malo cum 125
 hic atque ille ? " avidos<sup>3</sup> vicinum funus ut aegros exanimat mortisque metu sibi parcere cogit, sic teneros animos aliena opprobria saepe
 absterrent vitiis.

Ex hoc ego sanus ab illis, perniciem quaecumque ferunt, mediocribus et quis 130
 ignoscas<sup>4</sup> vitiis teneor. fortassis et istinc largiter abstulerit<sup>5</sup> longa aetas, liber amicus, consilium proprium ; neque enim, cum lectulus aut me
 porticus excepit, desum mihi : " rectius hoc est :
 hoc faciens vivam melius : sic dulcis amicis 135
 occurram : hoc quidam non belle : numquid ego illi imprudens olim faciam simile ? " haec ego mecum compressis agito labris ; ubi quid datur oti,

---

<sup>1</sup> electis M, II : electi E.      <sup>2</sup> factum aDEM.
<sup>3</sup> vides, II.      <sup>4</sup> ignoscat, II.      <sup>5</sup> abstulerint aDEM.

---

<sup>a</sup> A reference to the list of jurors, men of high character, annually empanelled by the praetor to serve in the trial of criminal cases.

is the repute of Trebonius, caught in the act. Your philosopher will give you theories for shunning or seeking this or that : enough for me, if I can uphold the rule our fathers have handed down, and if, so long as you need a guardian, I can keep your health and name from harm. When years have brought strength to body and mind, you will swim without the cork." With words like these would he mould my boyhood ; and whether he were advising me to do something, " You have an example for so doing," he would say, and point to one of the special judges ;<sup>a</sup> or were forbidding me, " Can you doubt whether this is dishonourable and disadvantageous or not, when so and so stands in the blaze of ill repute ? " As a neighbour's funeral scares gluttons when sick, and makes them, through fear of death, careful of themselves, so the tender mind is oft deterred from vice by another's shame.

<sup>129</sup> Thanks to this training I am free from vices which bring disaster, though subject to lesser frailties such as you would excuse. Perhaps even from these much has been withdrawn by time's advance, candid friends, self-counsel ; for when my couch welcomes me or I stroll in the colonnade,<sup>b</sup> I do not fail myself : " This is the better course : if I do that, I shall fare more happily : thus I shall delight the friends I meet : that was ugly conduct of so and so : is it possible that some day I may thoughtlessly do anything like that ? " Thus, with lips shut tight, I debate with myself ; and when I find a bit of leisure, I trifle with my <sup>b</sup> The colonnades, or porticoes, were a striking architectural feature of ancient Rome, and much used for promenading in. The lectulus was an easy couch for reclining upon while reading, corresponding to our comfortable arm-chairs.

HORACE

illudo<sup>1</sup> chartis. hoc est mediocribus illis
ex vitiis unum : cui si concedere nolis, multa poetarum veniat<sup>2</sup> manus, auxilio quae sit mihi (nam multo plures sumus), ac veluti te Iudaei cogemus in hanc concedere turbam.

140

<sup>1</sup> incumbo, II: Röhl conjectures includo.

<sup>2</sup> veniet Acron, Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> Horace toys with his papers by jotting down his random thoughts.

<sup>b</sup> For the eagerness of the Jews to proselytize cf. St. Matthew xxiii. 15.

<sup>c</sup> Among the numerous articles that contain a discussion of this Satire, reference may be made to the following:—

papers.<sup>a</sup> This is one of those lesser frailties I spoke of, and if you should make no allowance for it, then would a big band of poets come to my aid—for we are the big majority—and we, like the Jews,<sup>b</sup> will compel you to make one of our throng.<sup>c</sup>

- G. L. Hendrickson, "Horace, Sermones i. 4. A Protest and a Programme," A.J.P. xxi. pp. 121 ff.; "Satira—the Genesis of a Literary Form," C.P. vi. pp. 129 ff.; Charles Knapp, "The Sceptical Assault on the Roman Tradition concerning the Dramatic Satira," A.J.P. xxxiii. pp. 125 ff.; H. R. Fairclough, "Horace's View of the Relations between Satire and Comedy," A.J.P. xxxiv. pp. 183 ff.; B. L. Ullman, "Horace on the Nature of Satire," A.P.A. xlviii. pp. 111 ff.; "Dramatic Satira," C.P. ix. pp. 1 ff.

V

A JOURNEY TO BRUNDISIUM

THIS Satire is modelled upon one by Lucilius, who in his third book had described a journey from Rome to Capua and thence to the Sicilian straits.

Horace's journey was associated with an embassy on which Maecenas and others were sent in 38 B.C. by Octavian, to make terms with Marcus Antonius, who, notwithstanding the so-called treaty of Brundisium, made between the rivals of two years earlier, was again somewhat estranged.

The travellers left Rome by the Appian Way, and made a night-journey from Appii Forum to Anxur by canal-boat through the Pomptine marshes. From Capua their road took them over the Apennines into the Apulian hill-country of Horace's birth, whence they passed on to Italy's eastern coast, reaching Brundisium in fifteen days. The journey had been pursued in a leisurely fashion, for if necessary it might have been covered in less than half that time.

Although the mission of Maecenas was a political one, Horace steers clear of political gossip. The account reads like a compilation of scanty notes from a diary, and yet leaves a delightful impression about the personal relations of men distinguished in literature and statesmanship. Some of the characteristics of the sketch are doubtless due to Horace's adherence to the satiric type. Thus the encounter of the two buffoons (51-69) is a dramatic scene, treated in a mock-heroic fashion, where the comparison made between Sarmentus and a unicorn recalls the Lucilian description of a rhinoceros with a projecting tooth, dente adverso eminulo hic est

SATIRES, I. v.

rhinoceros

(117 f. ed. Marx.)

while the four disfiguring lines (82-85) are parallel to a similar incident recorded by Lucilius. This close dependence of Horace upon Lucilius throughout is clearly shown by both Lejay, in his introduction to this Satire, and by Fiske in his Lucilius and Horace, pp. 306 ff.

Professor Tenney Frank, in Classical Philology, xv. (1920) p. 393, has made the plausible suggestion that Heliodorus, the rhetor, Graecorum longe doctissimus, of ll. 2 and 3, is really Apollodorus, who was chosen by Julius Caesar to be the teacher of Octavian, and who is called by Wilamowitz "the founder of the classical school of Augustan poetry." The name Apollodorus cannot be used in hexameters, and Helios would be an easy substitution for Apollo. This scholar would have been a not unworthy member of the distinguished literary group who accompanied Maecenas to Brundisium.

V.

Egressum magna me accepit<sup>1</sup> Aricia Roma
 hospitio modico ; rhetor comes Heliodorus, Graecorum longe<sup>2</sup> doctissimus : inde Forum Appi, differtum nautis, cauponibus atque malignis.
 hoc iter ignavi divisimus, altius ac nos 5
 praecinctis unum : minus est gravis Appia tardis.
 hic ego propter aquam, quod erat deterrima, ventri indico bellum, cenantis haud animo aequo expectans comites.

Iam nox inducere terris
 umbras et caelo diffundere signa parabat. 10
 tum pueri nautis, pueris convicia nautae ingerere : “ huc appelle ! ” “ trecentos inseris.” “ ohe,

iam satis est.” dum aes exigitur, dum mula ligatur, tota abit hora. mali culices ranaeque palustres avertunt somnos, absentem ut<sup>3</sup> cantat amicam 15
 multa prolutus vappa nauta atque viator certatim. tandem fessus dormire viator incipit ac missae pastum retinacula mulae

---

<sup>1</sup> exceptit D, II.    <sup>2</sup> linguae K, II.    <sup>3</sup> ut omitted by CDK.

<sup>a</sup> The “ Market of Appius,” for which see Acts xxviii. 15, was at the head of the canal which ran through the Pomptine marshes to Feronia.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. from Rome to Appii Forum, nearly forty miles. The phrase altius praecinctis means literally “ higher girt,” cf. the Biblical “ gird up your loins.”

SATIRE V

Leaving mighty Rome, I found shelter in a modest inn at Aricia, having for companion Heliodorus the rhetorician, far most learned of all Greeks. Next came Appii Forum,<sup>a</sup> crammed with boatmen and stingy tavern-keepers. This stretch<sup>b</sup> we lazily cut in two, though smarter travellers make it in a single day: the Appian Way is less tiring, if taken slowly. Here owing to the water, for it was villainous, I declare war against my stomach, and wait impatiently while my companions dine.

<sup>9</sup> Already night was beginning to draw her curtain over the earth and to sprinkle the sky with stars. Then slaves loudly rail at boatmen, boatmen at slaves: "Bring to here!" "You're packing in hundreds!" "Stay, that's enough!" What with collecting fares and harnessing the mule<sup>c</sup> a whole hour slips away. Cursed gnats and frogs of the fens drive off sleep, the boatman, soaked in sour wine, singing the while of the girl he left behind, and a passenger<sup>d</sup> taking up the refrain. The passenger at last tires and falls asleep, and the lazy boatman

<sup>c</sup> The mule was to pull the boat through the canal.

<sup>d</sup> Some take viator to mean a driver of the mule along the tow-path, but, according to ll. 18, 19, it would seem to be the boatman who drives the mule and who drops his work to take a nap on the bank.

HORACE

nauta piger saxo religat stertitque supinus.
iamque dies aderat, nil cum procedere lintrem sentimus, donec cerebrosus prosilit unus ac mulae nautaeque caput lumbosque saligno
fuste dolat. 20

Quarta vix demum exponimur hora.
ora manusque tua lavimus, Feronia, lympha.
milia tum pransi tria repimus atque subimus 25
impositum saxis late candentibus Anxur.
huc venturus erat Maecenas optimus atque Cocceius, missi magnis de rebus uterque legati, aversos soliti componere amicos.
hic oculis ego nigra meis collyria lippus 30
illinere. interea Maecenas advenit atque Cocceius Capitoque simul Fonteius, ad unguem factus homo, Antoni non ut magis alter amicus.

Fundos Aufidio Lusco praetore libenter linquimus, insani ridentes praemia scribae, 35
praetextam et latum clavum prunaeque vatillum.
in Mamurrarum lassi deinde urbe manemus, Murena praebente domum, Capitone culinam.
postera<sup>1</sup> lux oritur multo gratissima : namque Plotius et Varius<sup>2</sup> Sinuessae Vergiliusque 40
occurrunt, animae qualis neque candidiores terra tulit, neque quis me sit devinctior alter.

<sup>1</sup> proxima a.

<sup>2</sup> varus K, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> The word soliti implies at least one previous experience of this sort and probably refers to the treaty of Brundisium, 40 B.C.

<sup>b</sup> The Latin expression involves a metaphor from sculpture, for the artist would pass his finger-nail over the marble, to test the smoothness of its joints.

<sup>c</sup> The chief official at Fundi was doubtless an aedile 66

SATIRES, I. v. 19-42

turns his mule out to graze, ties the reins to a stone, and drops a-snoring on his back. Day was now dawning when we find that our craft was not under way, until one hot-headed fellow jumps out, and with willow cudgel bangs mule and boatman on back and head.

<sup>23</sup> At last, by ten o'clock we are barely landed, and wash face and hands in thy stream, Feronia. Then we breakfast, and crawling on three miles climb up to Anxur, perched on her far-gleaming rocks. Here Maecenas was to meet us, and noble Cocceius, envoys both on business of import, and old hands at settling feuds between friends.<sup>a</sup> Here I put black ointment on my sore eyes. Meanwhile Maecenas arrives and Cocceius, and with them Fonteius Capito, a man without flaw,<sup>b</sup> so that Antony has no closer friend.

<sup>34</sup> Fundi, with its "praetor"<sup>c</sup> Aufidius Luscus, we quit with delight, laughing at the crazy clerk's gew-gaws, his bordered robe, broad stripe, and pan of charcoal. Next, wearied out we stop in the city of the Mamurrae,<sup>d</sup> Murena providing shelter and Capito the larder. Most joyful was the morrow's rising, for at Sinuessæ there meet us Plotius, Varius, and Virgil, whitest souls earth ever bore, to whom none can be more deeply attached than I. O the

but as he gave himself airs, Horace dubs him "praetor." Aufidius, like Horace himself, had once been a humble scriba at Rome. In his present exalted position he wears a toga with a purple border, and a tunic with a broad purple stripe. Burning charcoal is carried before him, probably in case some ceremonial sacrifice is seen to be appropriate on the occasion of this visit of Maecenas.

<sup>e</sup> Mamurra, a notorious favourite of Julius Caesar, came from Formiæ.

HORACE

o qui complexus et gaudia quanta fuerunt !
nil ego contulerim<sup>1</sup> iucundo sanus amico.

Proxima Campano ponti quae villula, tectum 45
praebuit, et parochi quae debent ligna salemque.
hinc muli Capuae clitellas tempore ponunt.
lusum it Maecenas, dormitum ego Vergiliusque :
namque pila lippis inimicum et ludere crudis.
hinc nos Coccei recipit plenissima villa, 50
quae super est Caudi<sup>2</sup> cauponas.

Nunc mihi paucis

Sarmenti scurrae pugnam Messique Cicirri, Musa, velim memores, et quo patre natus uterque contulerit litis. Messi clarum genus Osci ; Sarmenti domina exstat : ab his maioribus orti 55
ad pugnam venere. prior Sarmentus : " equi te esse feri similem dico." ridemus, et ipse Messius " accipio," caput et movet. " o tua cornu ni foret exsecto frons," inquit, " quid faceres, cum sic mutilus minitaris<sup>3</sup> ? " at illi foeda cicatrix 60 saetosam laevi frontem turpaverat oris.
Campanum in morbum, in faciem permulta iocatus,
pastorem saltaret uti Cyclopa rogabat :
nil illi larva<sup>4</sup> aut tragicis opus esse cothurnis.

<sup>1</sup> praetulerim C.

<sup>2</sup> caudi DK Porph. : claudi most MSS.

<sup>3</sup> miniteris DEM.

<sup>4</sup> barba DR.

<sup>a</sup> The villula was probably a small house built for the convenience of persons travelling on public business, where officers were stationed whose duty it was to provide ordinary necessities. For these officers Horace uses a Greek word (parochi from παρέχειν), the regular Latin word, according to Porphyrio, being copiarii.

<sup>b</sup> In mock-heroic style Horace describes a battle of wit between two buffoons, one of whom, Sarmentus, is a freed-man of Maecenas, while the other, Cicirrus, or "game-cock," is of the native Oscan stock of Samnium.

embracing! O the rejoicing! Nothing, so long as I am in my senses, would I match with the joy a friend may bring.

<sup>45</sup> The little house close to the Campanian bridge put a roof above our heads, and the state-purveyors,<sup>a</sup> as in duty bound, furnished fuel and salt. Next, at Capua, our mules lay aside their saddle-bags at an early hour. Maecenas goes off to ball-playing, Virgil and I to sleep, for such play is hard on the sore-eyed and the dyspeptic. Another stage, and we are taken in at the well-stocked villa of Cocceius, lying above the inns of Caudium.

<sup>51</sup> Now, O Muse, recount in brief the contest of Sarmentus the jester and Messius Cicirrus, and the lineage of the two who engaged in the fray.<sup>b</sup> Messius was of famous stock, an Oscan; the mistress of Sarmentus is still living: from such ancestry sprung,<sup>c</sup> they entered the lists. And first Sarmentus: "You, I say, are like a wild horse." We laugh, and Messius himself, "I grant you," and tosses his head. "Oh!" says Sarmentus, "if only the horn had not been cut out of your forehead, what would you do, when you can threaten, thus dehorned?" Now an unsightly scar had disfigured the left side of his bristly brow. With many a joke on his Campanian disease<sup>d</sup> and on his face, he begged him to dance the Cyclops shepherd-dance: he would need neither mask nor

<sup>a</sup> The scholiast on Juvenal, Sat. v. 3, tells us that a certain Sarmentus had been a slave, who on the proscription and death of his master Favonius had been bought by Maecenas and set free. If the Sarmentus of this scene is the same man, the domina is the widow of Favonius.

<sup>d</sup> The scholiast in Cruquius explains this of warts, which left scars when removed.

HORACE

multa Cicirrus ad haec : donasset iamne catenam 65
 ex voto Laribus, quaerebat ; scriba quod esset, nilo deterius dominae<sup>1</sup> ius esse ; rogabat denique, cur umquam fugisset, cui satis una farris libra foret, gracili sic tamque pusillo.
 prorsus iucunde cenam producimus illam. 70

Tendimus hinc recta<sup>2</sup> Beneventum ; ubi sedulus hospes

paene macros arsit dum turdos versat in igni ;
 nam vaga per veterem dilapso<sup>3</sup> flamma culinam
 Volcano summum properabat lambere tectum.
 convivas avidos cenam servosque timentis 75
 tum rapere atque omnis restinguere velle videres.

Incipit ex illo montis Apulia notos ostentare mihi, quos torret<sup>4</sup> Atabulus et quos numquam erepsemus, nisi nos vicina Trivici villa recepisset, lacrimoso non sine fumo, 80
 udos cum foliis ramos urente camino.

hic ego mendacem stultissimus usque puellam
 ad mediam noctem exspecto : somnus tamen aufert intentum veneri ; tum in mundo somnia visu nocturnam vestem maculant ventremque supinum. 85

Quattuor hinc rapimur viginti et milia raedis, mansuri oppidulo, quod versu dicere non est,
 signis perfacile est : venit vilissima rerum hic aqua ; sed panis longe pulcherrimus, ultra callidus ut soleat umeris portare viator. 90

<sup>1</sup> domini C.

<sup>3</sup> delapso CK, II.

<sup>2</sup> recte D, II.

<sup>4</sup> terret CE.

---

<sup>a</sup> Altino is to-day the local Apulian term for the hot scirocco, which Horace calls the "Atabulus."

<sup>b</sup> The name is not recorded, at least correctly, but Horace has in mind a passage in Lucilius, viz. :

tragic buskin. Much had Cicirrus to say to this. Had he yet, he inquired, made a votive offering of his chain to the Lares? Clerk though he was, yet his mistress's claim was not less strong. At the last he asked why he had ever run away, since a pound of meal was enough for one so lean and so puny. Right merrily did we prolong that supper.

<sup>71</sup> Thence we travel straight to Beneventum, where our bustling host was nearly burned out while turning lean thrushes over the fire. For as Vulcan slipped out through the old kitchen the vagrant flame hastened to lick the roof. Then you might have seen the hungry guests and frightened slaves snatching up the dinner, and all trying to quench the blaze.

<sup>77</sup> From this point Apulia begins to show to my eyes her familiar hills, which the Altino<sup>a</sup> scorches, and over which we had never crawled had not a villa near Trivicum taken us in, but not without smoke that brought tears, as green wood, leaves and all, was burning in the stove. Here I, utter fool that I am, await a faithless girl right up to midnight. Then, after all, sleep carries me off still thinking upon love, and evil dreams assail me.

<sup>86</sup> From here we are whirled in carriages four and twenty miles, to spend the night in a little town I cannot name in verse, though 'tis quite easy to define it by tokens.<sup>b</sup> Here water, nature's cheapest product, is sold, but the bread is far the best to be had, so that the knowing traveller is wont to shoulder

servorum est festus dies hic
quem plane hexametro versu non dicere possis (vi. 228, ed. Marx),

"This is the slaves' festal day, which one cannot freely name in hexameter verse."

HORACE

nam Canusi lapidosus (aquae non-ditior urna), qui locus a forti Diomede est conditus olim.<sup>1</sup>
flentibus hinc Varius discedit maestus amicis.

Inde Rubos fessi pervenimus, utpote longum
carpentes iter et factum corruptius imbri.

95

postera tempestas melior, via peior ad usque Bari moenia piscosi. dein<sup>2</sup> Gnatia lymphis iratis exstructa dedit risusque iocosque, dum flamma sine tura liquescere limine sacro

persuadere cupit. credat<sup>3</sup> Iudaeus Apella,

100

non ego : namque deos didici securum agere aevum, nec, si quid miri faciat natura, deos id

• tristis ex alto caeli demittere<sup>4</sup> tecto.

Brundisium longae finis chartaeque viaeque est.

<sup>1</sup> Line 92 was deleted by Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> dehinc, II.

<sup>3</sup> credet CK Goth.

<sup>4</sup> dimittere DE.

---

<sup>a</sup> This implies that Gnatia had no springs. Pliny (N.H. ii. 111) mentions the miracle of wood, placed on a sacred stone, taking fire spontaneously. The stone would seem to have been at the entrance of a temple.

<sup>b</sup> The Jews, who were very numerous in Rome under a load for stages beyond ; for at Canusium, a place founded long ago by brave Diomede, it is gritty, and as to water, the town is no better off by a jugful. Here Varius leaves us, to the grief of his weeping friends.

1793, 10, 11, 12, 13

<sup>94</sup> Thence we come to Rubi, very weary after covering a long stage much marred by the rain. Next day's weather was better, but the road worse, right up to the walls of Barium, a fishing town. Then Gnatia, built under the wrath of the water-nymphs,<sup>a</sup> brought us laughter and mirth in its effort to convince us that frankincense melts without fire at the temple's threshold. Apella, the Jew,<sup>b</sup> may believe it, not I ; for I " have learned that the gods lead a care-free life,"<sup>c</sup> and if Nature works any marvel, the gods do not send it down from their heavenly home aloft when in surly mood<sup>d</sup> ! Brundisium is the end of a long story and of a long journey.

Augustus, were regarded by the Romans as peculiarly superstitious.

<sup>a</sup> Horace is quoting from Lucretius, De rerum nat. v. 82.

<sup>d</sup> Horace uses tristis of the gods as Virgil speaks of Charon as tristis, Aen. vi. 315.

VI

ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL AMBITION

THIS Satire, addressed to the poet's patron, is mainly autobiographical. Horace, now an intimate friend of Maecenas, has become an object of suspicion and envy to many people whose social and political aspirations were unsatisfied. He therefore disclaims such ambition for himself, sets forth the principles upon which Maecenas chooses his friends, and pays a noble tribute to his own father, to whom he is indebted for all that he is, both in character and education. Himself the son of a freedman, he has no wish to change places with a man of patrician birth. As it is, he lives a simple and care-free life, and is far more happy than if he had the burden of noble ancestry on his shoulders.

As this interesting Satire contains no allusion to the Sabine farm, it was probably composed before 33 B.C., the year when Maecenas presented him with the estate. In its subject and treatment it is to be grouped with the third, fourth, and tenth Satires. It is at once a defence of Maecenas, who did not look down upon men of lowly birth, and of the poet himself, who is not ashamed of his humble origin, but is proud of his freedman father, who had given him the intellectual and moral training which won for him a place in the circle of his patron.

For the influence of Lucilius upon this Satire see Introduction C.

VI.

Non quia, Maecenas, Lydorum quidquid Etruscos incoluit finis, nemo generosior est te,
nec quod avus tibi maternus fuit atque paternus,
olim qui magnis legionibus imperitarent,<sup>1</sup>
ut plerique solent, naso suspendis adunco 5 ignotos,<sup>2</sup> ut<sup>3</sup> me libertino patre natum.<sup>4</sup>

Cum referre negas quali sit quisque parente natus, dum ingenuus, persuades hoc tibi vere, ante potestatem Tulli atque ignobile regnum 10
multos saepe viros nullis maioribus ortos et vixisse probos, amplis et honoribus auctos ;
contra Laevinum, Valeri genus, unde Superbus Tarquinius regno pulsus<sup>5</sup> fugit, unius assis non umquam pretio pluris licuisse, notante iudice quo nosti populo, qui stultus honores 15
saepe dat indignis et famae servit ineptus, qui stupet in titulis et imaginibus. quid oportet
nos facere a volgo longe longeque<sup>6</sup> remotos ?

Namque esto, populus Laevino mallet honorem

<sup>1</sup> imperitarint, I, accepted by Vollmer.

<sup>2</sup> ignoto Palmer.      <sup>3</sup> ut D: aut aM, II; aut ut C: at ut E.

<sup>4</sup> natus or natos aCDE.

<sup>5</sup> pulsus regno CK.

<sup>6</sup> lateque Goth.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Odes, i. 1. 1. The Etruscans, according to the tradition commonly accepted in antiquity, came from Lydia.

<sup>b</sup> The reference is to Servius Tullius, the sixth king of Rome, said to have been the son of a female slave. See, however, Livy, i. 39. 5.

SATIRE VI

Though of all the Lydians that are settled in Tuscan lands none is of nobler birth than you,<sup>a</sup> and though grandsires of yours, on your mother's and father's side alike, commanded mighty legions in days of old, yet you, Maecenas, do not, like most of the world, curl up your nose at men of unknown birth, men like myself, a freedman's son.

<sup>7</sup> When you say it matters not who a man's parent is, if he be himself free-born, you rightly satisfy yourself of this, that before the reign of Tullius and his lowly kingship,<sup>b</sup> numbers of men, sprung from ancestors of no account, often lived upright lives and were honoured with high office ; that Laevinus, on the other hand, descendant of that Valerius through whom Tarquin the Proud was driven from his throne to exile, was never valued higher by the price of a single penny, even when rated by the people—the judge you know so well, who in folly often gives office to the unworthy, is stupidly enslaved to fame, and dazzled by titles of honour and waxen masks.<sup>c</sup> What, then, should we <sup>d</sup> do, we who are set far, far above the vulgar ?

<sup>19</sup> For let us grant that the people would rather

<sup>e</sup> Waxen masks of ancestors with accompanying inscriptions would imply the antiquity and nobility of one's family.

<sup>f</sup> The plural is generic, meaning intelligent and educated people.

HORACE

quam Decio mandare novo, censorque moveret 20
 Appius, ingenuo si non essem patre natus :
 vel merito, quoniam in propria non pelle quiessem.
 sed fulgente trahit constrictos Gloria curru
 non minus ignotos generosis. quo tibi, Tilli, sumere depositum clavum fierique tribuno ? 25
 invidia accrevit, privato quae minor esset.
 nam ut quisque insanus nigris medium impediit<sup>1</sup> crus pellibus et latum demisit<sup>2</sup> pectore clavum, audit continuo : “ quis homo hic est<sup>3</sup> ? ” “ quo patre natus ? ”
 ut<sup>4</sup> si qui aegrotet quo morbo Barrus, haberi 30 et cupiat formosus, eat quacumque, puellis iniciat<sup>5</sup> curam quaerendi singula, quali sit facie, sura, quali pede, dente, capillo :
 sic qui promittit civis, urbem sibi curae,
 imperium fore et Italiam, delubra deorum, 35
 quo patre sit natus, num ignota matre inhonestus, omnis mortalis curare et quaerere cogit.<sup>6</sup> “ tune, Syri, Damae, aut Dionysi filius, audes deicere de saxo civis aut tradere Cadmo ? ”
 “ at Novius collega gradu post me sedet uno : 40

<sup>1</sup> impediit Porph. : impedit MSS.

<sup>2</sup> dimisit DEK.

<sup>3</sup> est aDE : et CK : aut Bentley.

<sup>4</sup> et φ.

<sup>5</sup> inliciat CK Goth.

<sup>6</sup> cogit K : cogat MSS.

<sup>a</sup> A reference to the well-known fable of the Ass in the Lion's Skin. P. Decius Mus, first of a plebeian family to become a consul, sacrificed himself in the Latin war (Livy, viii. 6).

<sup>b</sup> The laticlave or broad stripe (cf. Sat. i. 5. 36) of purple on the tunic was a mark of the senatorian order. Tillius, according to the scholiasts, was removed from the senate

give office to a Laevinus than to an unknown Decius, and that an Appius as censor would strike out my name if I were not the son of a free-born father—and quite rightly, for not having stayed quiet in my own skin.<sup>a</sup> The truth is, Vanity drags all, bound to her glittering car, the unknown no less than the well known. What good was it to you, Tillius, to assume the stripe once doffed and become a tribune? <sup>b</sup> Envy fastened on you afresh, but would be less, were you in a private station. For as soon as any man is so crazy as to bind the black thongs half way up his leg,<sup>c</sup> and to drop the broad stripe down his breast, at once he hears: “What fellow is this? What was his father?” Just as, if one should suffer from the same malady as Barrus, and long to be thought handsome, then wherever he went he would make the girls eager to ask about details—what his face was like, his ankle, his foot, his teeth, his hair: so he who takes it upon himself to look after his fellow-citizens and the city, the empire and Italy and the temples of the gods, compels all the world to take an interest, and to ask who was his father, and whether he is dishonoured through an unknown mother. “Do you, the son of a Syrus, a Dama, a Dionysius,<sup>d</sup> dare to fling from the rock<sup>e</sup> or to hand over to Cadmus citizens of Rome?” “But,” you say, “Novius, my colleague, sits one row by Julius Caesar, but after the Dictator's death resumed this dignity and also became a military tribune.

<sup>a</sup> Senators wore a peculiar shoe, fastened by four black thongs bound about the leg.

<sup>d</sup> These are common slave-names.

<sup>e</sup> i.e. the Tarpeian rock from which criminals were sometimes thrown by order of a tribune. Cadmus was a public executioner.

HORACE

namque est ille, pater quod erat meus." " hoc tibi

Paulus

et Messalla videris ? at hic, si plostra ducenta concurrantque foro tria funera magna, sonabit<sup>1</sup>
cornua quod vincatque tubas : saltem tenet hoc nos."

Nunc ad me redeo libertino patre natum, 45
quem rodunt omnes libertino patre natum,<sup>2</sup> nunc, quia sim<sup>3</sup> tibi, Maecenas, convictor, at olim, quod mihi pareret legio Romana tribuno.
dissimile hoc illi est, quia non, ut forsit honorem
iure mihi invidet quivis, ita te quoque amicum, 50
praesertim cautum dignos adsumere, prava ambitione procul. felicem dicere non hoc me possim,<sup>4</sup> casu quod te sortitus amicum :
nulla etenim mihi te fors obtulit ; optimus olim Vergilius, post hunc Varius, dixere quid essem. 55
ut veni coram, singultim pauca locutus,
infans namque pudor prohibebat plura profari,
non ego me claro natum patre, non ego circum
me Satureiano vectari rura caballo, sed quod eram narro. respondes, ut tuus est mos, 60
pauca : abeo, et revocas nono post mense iubesque esse in amicorum numero. magnum hoc ego duco, quod placui tibi, qui turpi secernis honestum
non patre praeclaro, sed vita et pectore puro.

Atqui si vitiis mediocribus ac mea<sup>5</sup> paucis 65

<sup>1</sup> funera, magna sonabit ; so Palmer, Wickham, Vollmer.

<sup>2</sup> natus aD.

<sup>3</sup> sum D.

<sup>4</sup> possunt com. Cruq., Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> aut mea, II.

<sup>a</sup> Seats in the theatre were assigned according to rank, knights occupying the first fourteen rows, and the senators the orchestral space.

<sup>b</sup> Horace was a tribune in the army of Brutus, but each legion had six tribunes.

behind me,<sup>a</sup> for he is only what my father was.”
 “Do you therefore fancy yourself a Paulus or a Messala? Why, this Novius, if two hundred carts and three big funerals come clashing in the Forum, will shout loud enough to drown horns and trumpets :
 that at least takes with us.”

<sup>45</sup> Now to return to myself, “son of a freedman
 father,” whom all carp at as “son of a freedman
 father”—now, because I consort with you, Maecenas;
 but in other days, because as tribune I had a Roman legion under my command.<sup>b</sup> This case and that are different, for though perchance anyone may rightly grudge me the office, yet he should not grudge me your friendship as well—the less so, as you are cautious to choose as friends only the worthy, who stand aloof from base self-seeking. Fortunate I could not call myself as having won your friendship by some chance; for ’twas no case of luck throwing you in my way; that best of men, Virgil, some time ago, and after him Varius, told you what manner of man I was.
 On coming into your presence I said a few faltering words, for speechless shame stopped me from saying more. My tale was not that I was a famous father’s son, not that I rode about my estate on a Saturian<sup>c</sup> steed: I told you what I was. As is your way, you answered little and I withdrew; then, nine months later, you sent for me again and bade me join your friends. I count it a great honour that I pleased you, who discern between fair and foul, not by a father’s fame, but by blamelessness of life and heart.

<sup>65</sup> And yet, if the flaws that mar my otherwise sound nature are but trifling and few in number,

<sup>c</sup> i.e. Tarentine, Satrium being the district in which Tarentum was founded. The adjective belongs quite as much to rura as to caballo.

HORACE

mendosa est natura, alioqui<sup>1</sup> recta, velut si
 egregio inspersos reprehendas corpore naevos, si neque avaritiam neque sordes nec<sup>2</sup> mala lustra obiciet vere quisquam mihi, purus et insons, 70
 ut me collaudem, si et vivo carus amicis ;
 causa fuit pater his, qui macro pauper agello noluit in Flavi ludum me mittere, magni quo pueri magnis e<sup>3</sup> centurionibus orti,
 laevo suspensi loculos tabulamque lacerto,
 ibant octonos referentes Idibus aeris,<sup>4</sup> 75
 sed puerum est ausus Romam portare, docendum
 artis, quas doceat quivis eques atque senator semet prognatos. vestem servosque sequentis, in magno ut populo, si qui<sup>5</sup> vidisset, avita
 ex re praeberi sumptus mihi crederet illos. 80
 ipse mihi custos incorruptissimus omnis circum doctores aderat. quid multa ? pudicum, qui primus virtutis honos, servavit<sup>6</sup> ab omni
 non solum facto, verum opprobrio quoque turpi ;
 nec timuit, sibi ne vitio quis verteret, olim 85
 si praeco parvas aut, ut fuit ipse, coactor mercedes sequeretur : neque ego essem questus : at hoc<sup>7</sup> nunc

laus illi debetur et a me gratia maior.

Nil me paeniteat sanum patris huius, eoque
 non, ut magna dolo factum negat esse suo pars, 90
 quod non ingenuos habeat clarosque parentis,
 sic me defendam. longe mea discrepat istis

<sup>1</sup> alioquin, I, but cf. Sat. i. 4. 4.

<sup>2</sup> nec (mala) V: ac MSS. : aut Porph., Bentley. <sup>3</sup> et a.

<sup>4</sup> octonis . . . aera M, II, retained by Wickham.

<sup>5</sup> si quis K, Goth. <sup>6</sup> servabat, II. <sup>7</sup> ad hoc MSS.

<sup>a</sup> The pupils paid their small school fee on the Ides of each month. The reading octonis would imply that the school-year lasted eight months.

even as you might find fault with moles spotted over a comely person—if no one will justly lay to my charge avarice or meanness or lewdness; if, to venture on self-praise, my life is free from stain and guilt and I am loved by my friends—I owe this to my father, who, though poor with a starveling farm, would not send me to the school of Flavius, to which grand boys used to go, sons of grand centurions, with slate and satchel slung over the left arm, each carrying his eightpence on the Ides<sup>a</sup>—nay, he boldly took his boy off to Rome, to be taught those studies that any knight or senator would have his own offspring taught. Anyone who saw my clothes and attendant slaves—as is the way in a great city<sup>b</sup>—would have thought that such expense was met from ancestral wealth. He himself, a guardian true and tried, went with me among all my teachers. Need I say more? He kept me chaste—and that is virtue's first grace—free not only from every deed of shame, but from all scandal. He had no fear that some day, if I should follow a small trade as crier or like himself as tax-collector, somebody would count this to his discredit. Nor should I have made complaint, but, as it is, for this I owe him praise and thanks the more.

<sup>89</sup> Never while in my senses could I be ashamed of such a father, and so I will not defend myself, as would a goodly number, who say it is no fault of theirs that they have not free-born and famous parents. Far different from this is what I say and what I think:

<sup>b</sup> I take this to mean that on going to Rome Horace's father did as the Romans did. At Venusia Horace would have gone unattended, carrying his own books. Some, however, take the words in magno ut populo with vidisset, i.e. "had anyone noticed—so far as one could notice such things in a great throng."

HORACE

et vox et ratio : nam si natura iuberet
 a certis annis aevum remeare peractum atque alios legere ad fastum quoscumque parentis 95 optaret sibi quisque,<sup>1</sup> meis contentus honestos<sup>2</sup>
 fascibus et sellis nollem mihi sumere, demens iudicio volgi, sanus fortasse tuo, quod nollem onus haud umquam solitus portare molestum.
 nam mihi continuo maior quaerenda foret res 100
 atque salutandi plures, ducendus et unus et comes alter, uti ne solus rusve peregreve<sup>3</sup> exirem, plures calones atque caballi pascendi, ducenda petorrita. nunc mihi curto ire licet mulo vel si libet usque Tarentum, 105
 mantica cui lumbos onere ulceret atque eques armos :
 obiciet nemo sordes mihi, quas tibi, Tilli,
 cum Tiburte via praetorem quinque sequuntur
 te pueri, lasanum portantes oenophorumque.
 hoc ego commodius quam tu, praeclare senator, 110
 milibus atque aliis vivo.

Quacumque libido est,

incedo solus ; percontor quanti holus ac far ;
 fallacem Circum vespertinumque<sup>4</sup> pererro saepe Forum ; adsisto divinis ; inde domum me ad porri et ciceris refero laganique catinum. 115
 cena ministratur pueris tribus, et lapis albus pocula cum cyatho duo sustinet ; adstat echinus
 vilis, cum patera gutus, Campana supellex.
 deinde eo dormitum, non sollicitus mihi quod cras

<sup>1</sup> si quisque, II.

<sup>2</sup> (h)onustos.

<sup>3</sup> peregre aut MSS. : Housman conjectures ne rus solusve peregre.

<sup>4</sup> vespertinusque.

---

<sup>a</sup> The fascēs were insignia of the consuls and praetors ; the curule sellae were a privilege of the aediles and censors as well.

for if after a given age Nature should call upon us to traverse our past lives again, and to choose in keeping with our pride any other parents each might crave—content with my own, I should decline to take those adorned with the rods and chairs of state.<sup>a</sup> And though the world would deem me mad, you, I hope, would think me sane for declining to shoulder a burden of trouble to which I have never been accustomed. For at once I should have to enlarge my means, to welcome more callers, to take one or two in my company so as not to go abroad or into the country alone; I should have to keep more pages and ponies, and take a train of wagons. To-day, if I will, I may go on a bob-tailed mule even to Tarentum, the saddle-bag's weight galling his loins, and the rider his withers. No one will taunt me with meanness as he does you, praetor Tillius,<sup>b</sup> when on the Tibur road five slaves follow you, carrying a commode and case of wine. In this and a thousand other ways I live in more comfort than you, illustrious senator.

<sup>111</sup> Wherever the fancy leads, I saunter forth alone. I ask the price of greens and flour; often toward evening I stroll round the cheating Circus<sup>c</sup> and the Forum. I listen to the fortune-tellers; then homeward betake me to my dish of leeks and peas and fritters. My supper is served by three boys, and a white stone-slab supports two cups with a ladle. By them stand a cheap salt-cellar, a jug and saucer of Campanian ware. Then I go off to sleep, untroubled with the thought that I must rise early on the morrow

<sup>b</sup> Apparently the man mentioned in l. 24 above.

<sup>c</sup> The stalls in the outer wall of the Circus Maximus were used by fortune-tellers, confidence-men, and the like.

HORACE

surgendum sit mane, obeundus Marsya, qui se 120
 voltum ferre negat Noviorum posse minoris.
 ad quartam iaceo ; post hanc vagor ; aut ego, lecto
 aut scripto quod me tacitum iuвет, unguor olivo, non quo fraudatis immundus Natta lucernis.
 ast ubi me fessum sol acrior ire lavatum 125
 admonuit, fugio Campum lusumque trigonem.<sup>1</sup>
 pransus non avide, quantum interpellet inani ventre diem durare, domesticus otior.

Haec est

vita solutorum misera ambitione gravique ;
 his me consolor victurum<sup>2</sup> suavius ac si 130
 quaestor avus pater atque meus patruusque<sup>3</sup> fuissent.

<sup>1</sup> fugio campum lusumque trigonem V<sup>1</sup>, Goth. (lusitque):
 fugio rabiosi tempora signi ms. Porph. Bannier (in Rh. M. lxxiii. neue Folge, pp. 65 ff.) makes the interesting claim that both readings are correct, the original passage having been such as the following :

admonuit fugio campum lusumque trigonem
 providus et fugio rabiosi tempora signi.

<sup>2</sup> victurus Goth.

<sup>3</sup> For patruus Bücheler conjectured praetor.

---

<sup>a</sup> A statue of the Satyr Marsyas stood in the Forum near
 the praetor's tribunal. The usurer Novius had his table and pass before Marsyas, who says he cannot stand the face of Novius Junior.<sup>a</sup> I lie a-bed till ten ; then I take a stroll, or after reading or writing something that will please me in quiet moments I anoint myself with oil—not such as filthy Natta steals from the lamps. But when I am weary and the fiercer sun has warned me to go to the baths, I shun the Campus and the game of ball.<sup>b</sup> After a slight luncheon, just enough to save me from an all-day fast, I idle away time at home.

<sup>128</sup> Such is the life of men set free from the burden of unhappy ambition. Thus I comfort myself with the thought that I shall live more happily than if my grandfather had been a quaestor, and my father and uncle likewise.

near by and so gives the poet an opportunity to put his own interpretation on the attitude or facial expression of Marsyas, who, after defeat in a musical contest with Apollo, was flayed alive. Extant copies of Myron's Marsyas show him with right hand uplifted and a face expressive of pain.

<sup>b</sup> The trigo was a game of ball in which three players took part. The phrase lusum trigonem means properly, "the playing of ball," and implies a transitive use of ludere (cf. "post decisa negotia," Ep. i. 7. 59 ; also Sat. ii. 3. 248). See Jefferson Elmore, A.P.A. xxxv. p. xcii.

VII

HO FOR A REGICIDE !

THE incident recorded here occurred, probably in 43 B.C., at Clazomenae in Asia Minor, when Brutus, as propraetor of the Province, was holding court, and Horace was serving as tribune in his army. The poem gives us a single scene, a battle of wit between two litigants, Rupilius Rex, of Praeneste, a man proscribed by Antony and Octavius, and Persius, a half-Greek, half-Roman merchant of Clazomenae. The main point of the story is found in Persius' pun on the name Rex (king), which he cleverly links up with the propraetor and the propraetor's most famous ancestor. The latter had driven out of Rome the ancient Tarquin kings, and Brutus himself had slain Caesar.

This little poem, similar, perhaps, to the farcical and dramatic scenes of early Satura, is probably the first of Horace's Sermones, and must have been composed before the battle of Philippi (42 B.C.), and the tragic death of Brutus.

VII.

Proscripti Regis Rupili ~~pus~~ <sup>us</sup> ~~atque~~ <sup>et</sup> venenum
hybrida quo pacto sit Persius ultus, opinor omnibus et lippis notum et tonsoribus esse.
Persius hic permagna negotia dives habebat Clazomenis, etiam litis cum Rege molestas, 5
durus homo atque odio qui posset vincere Regem, confidens, tumidus,<sup>1</sup> adeo sermonis amari,
Sisennas, Barros ut equis praecurreret albis.

Ad Regem redeo. postquam nihil inter utrumque convenit (hoc etenim sunt omnes iure molesti, 10 quo fortes, quibus adversum bellum incidit): inter Hectora Priamiden, animosum atque inter Achillem
ira fuit capitalis, ut ultima divideret mors,
non aliam ob causam, nisi quod virtus in utroque
summa fuit; duo si discordia vexet inertis, 15
aut si disparibus bellum incidat, ut Diomedi cum Lycio Glaucō, discedat pigrior,<sup>2</sup> ultro muneribus missis), Bruto praetore tenente ditem Asiam, Rupili et Persi par pugnat, uti non

<sup>1</sup> tumidusque, II.

<sup>2</sup> pigrior VK: pulchrior MSS.

<sup>a</sup> He was half-Greek and half-Roman.

SATIRE VII

How the mongrel<sup>a</sup> Persius took vengeance on the foul and venomous Rupilius Rex ("king"), an outlawed man, is a tale well known, methinks, to every blear-eyed man and barber.<sup>b</sup> This Persius, a rich man, had a very large business at Clazomenae, also a troublesome lawsuit with Rex. A rough man he was, the sort that in offensiveness could outdo Rex, bold and blustering and so bitter of speech as to outstrip a Sisenna or a Barrus with the speed of white coursers.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup> To return to Rex. When he and Persius could come to no terms—(for quarrelsome folk all claim the same right as heroes who meet front to front in battle: between Hector, son of Priam, and the wrathful Achilles, the anger was so deadly, that death alone could part them, and for this sole reason that the valour of each was supreme; if two cowards chance to quarrel, or an ill-matched pair meet in war, as Diomede and Lycian Glaucus,<sup>d</sup> the less valiant man gives way and sends gifts to boot)—well, when Brutus was praetor in charge of rich Asia, Persius

<sup>b</sup> The shops of apothecaries and barbers were favourite places of gossip.

<sup>c</sup> A proverbial expression, white horses being regarded as the swiftest of their kind. Cf. Virgil, Aen. xii. 83 ff.

<sup>d</sup> See Index under Glaucus. The reference is to a famous scene in the sixth Iliad.

HORACE

compositum<sup>1</sup> melius cum Bitho Bacchius. in ius<sup>2</sup> 20 acres procurrunt,<sup>3</sup> magnum spectaculum uterque.

Persius exponit causam ; ridetur ab omni conventu ; laudat Brutum laudatque cohortem ;
 solem Asiae Brutum appellat, stellasque salubris appellat comites, excepto Rege ; Canem illum, 25
 invisum agricolis sidus, venisse. ruebat flumen ut hibernum, fertur quo rara securis.
 tum Praenestinus salso multoque<sup>4</sup> fluenti
 expressa arbusto, regerit convicia, durus vindemiator et invictus, cui saepe viator 30
 cessisset magna compellans voce cuculum.

At Graecus, postquam est Italo perfusus aceto.
 Persius exclamat : " per magnos, Brute, deos te oro, qui reges consueris tollere, cur non hunc Regem iugulas ? operum hoc, mihi crede, tuorum est." 35

<sup>1</sup> compositus DK.

<sup>2</sup> in ius] intus V.

<sup>3</sup> procurrunt VK, II : concurrunt aDEM.

<sup>4</sup> multumque, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> In par and compositum Horace uses terms appropriate to gladiators, to which class Bacchius and Bithus belonged.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. in some mountain gorge, which wood-choppers cannot enter.

and Rupilius clashed, a pair<sup>a</sup> not less well matched than Bacchius and Bithus. Keenly they rush into court, each wondrous to behold.

<sup>22</sup> Persius sets forth his case : all the assembly laugh. He praises Brutus, he praises his staff. The "sun of Asia" he calls Brutus, and "Healthful stars" his suite—all except Rex, who had come like the Dog-star, hated of husbandmen. On he rushed like some winter torrent, whither the axe is seldom borne.<sup>b</sup> Then, in answer to his full flood of wit, the man of Praeneste flings back abuse, the very essence of the vineyard, like some vine-dresser, tough and invincible, to whom the wayfarer has often had to yield, when loudly hooting at him "Cuckoo!"<sup>c</sup>

<sup>32</sup> But the Greek Persius, now soused with Italian vinegar, cries out : "By the great gods, I implore you, O Brutus, since it is in your line to take off "kings," why not behead this Rex?"<sup>d</sup> "This, believe me, is a task meet for you."

<sup>e</sup> In calling out "Cuckoo!" the passer-by implies that the vine-dresser is late in his pruning, which should be finished before the cuckoo arrives in the spring.

<sup>f</sup> It was a Brutus who had driven out the Tarquins, and it was a Brutus who had slain Caesar.

VIII

HOW PRIAPUS PUT WITCHES TO ROUT

HORACE lays the scene of this incident in that part of the Esquiline which lay outside the famous Agger, or Mound of Servius, on the north-east side of Rome. In this district there had long been a burial-place, used especially for criminals and paupers, where, among the tombs, witches practised their weird and infernal rites. Here, however, Maecenas, co-operating with Augustus in the work of city improvement, had laid out beautiful gardens, in which he later built himself a palace with a conspicuous tower.<sup>a</sup>

The incident must be supposed to have occurred before the transformation from a squalid and repulsive site had been completed. A wooden statue, however, of Priapus, the god of gardens, had already been set up.

The gruesome story of the witches' incantations comes to a ridiculous end when the wood of the statue cracked, and the noise of the explosion drove the hags away in terror.

The Satire is closely connected in subject with Epodes 5 and 17. Virgil's eighth Eclogue may also be compared, as well as the three Priapea to be found among the minor poems attributed to Virgil.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. "molem propinquam nubibus arduis," Odes iii. 29. 10.

VIII.

Olim truncus eram ficulnus, inutile lignum,
 cum faber, incertus scamnum faceretne Priapum, maluit esse deum. deus inde ego, furum aviumque
 maxima formido ; nam fures dextra coerçet obscenoque ruber porrectus ab inguine palus ; 5
 ast importunas volucres in vertice harundo
 terret fixa vetatque novis considerare in hortis.
 huc prius angustis eiecta cadavera cellis conservus vili<sup>1</sup> portanda locabat in arca ;
 hoc miserae plebi stabat commune sepulcrum, 10
 Pantolabo scurrae Nomentanoque nepoti.
 mille pedes in fronte, trecentos cippus in agrum
 hic dabat, heredes monumentum ne sequeretur.<sup>2</sup>
 nunc licet Esquiliis habitare salubribus atque Aggere in aprico spatium, quo<sup>3</sup> modo tristes 15
 albis informem spectabant ossibus agrum ;

<sup>1</sup> vilis K, II.    <sup>2</sup> sequerentur K, II.    <sup>3</sup> qua Bentley.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Isaiah xlv. 10 ff., especially 17 "and the residue thereof he maketh a god."

<sup>b</sup> A wooden statue of Priapus, the garden-god, was used as a scarecrow.

<sup>c</sup> On the Esquiline Hill, just outside the Servian Wall, was a cemetery largely used for the pauper and criminal classes. Here, however, Maecenas laid out his Horti, or gardens, which became one of the beauty-spots of Imperial Rome.

<sup>d</sup> This verse may come from Lucilius. It is repeated in Sat. ii. 1. 22 and Nomentanus is mentioned in Sat. i. 1. 102.

SATIRE VIII

Once I was a fig-wood stem, a worthless log, when the carpenter, doubtful whether to make a stool or a Priapus, chose that I be a god.<sup>a</sup> A god, then, I became, of thieves and birds the special terror<sup>b</sup>; for thieves my right hand keeps in check, and this red stake, protruding from unsightly groin; while for the mischievous birds, a reed set on my head affrights them and keeps them from lighting in the new park.<sup>c</sup> Hither in other days a slave would pay to have carried on a cheap bier the carcasses of his fellows, cast out from their narrow cells. Here was the common burial-place fixed for pauper folk, for Pantolabus the parasite, and spendthrift Nomentanus.<sup>d</sup> Here a pillar assigned a thousand feet frontage and three hundred of depth, and provided that the graveyard should pass to no heirs.<sup>e</sup> To-day one may live on a wholesome Esquiline, and stroll on the sunny Rampart,<sup>f</sup> where of late one sadly looked out on ground ghastly with bleaching bones. For myself, * Horace puts into verse form the common inscription, which defined the dimensions of a plot of ground assigned for burial purposes and often closed with the abbreviated formula H. M. H. N. S. (Hoc monumentum heredes non sequetur).

<sup>f</sup> This is the famous Agger, an embankment and fosse of nearly a mile in length, which on the Esquiline level was a part of the Servian Wall system.

HORACE

cum mihi non tantum furesque feraeque suetae hunc vexare locum curae sunt<sup>1</sup> atque labori,
quantum carminibus quae versant atque venenis humanos animos : has nullo perdere<sup>2</sup> possum 20
nec prohibere modo, simul ac vaga Luna decorum
protulit os, quin ossa legant herbasque nocentis.

Vidi egomet nigra succinctam vadere palla Canidiam, pedibus nudis passoque capillo, cum Sagana maiore ululantem : pallor utrasque 25
fecerat horrendas aspectu. scalpere terram unguibus et pullam divellere mordicus agnam coeperunt ; cruor in fossam confusus, ut inde manis elicerent, animas responsa daturas.
lanea et effigies erat, altera cerea : maior 30
lanea, quae poenis compesceret inferiorem ;
cerea suppliciter stabat, servilibus ut quae
iam peritura modis. Hecaten vocat altera, saevam altera Tisiphonen : serpentes atque videres infernus errare canes, Lunamque rubentem, 35
ne foret his testis, post magna latere sepulcra.
mentior at si quid, merdis caput inquiner albis
corvorum, atque in me veniat mictum atque cacatum Iulius et fragilis Pediatia furque Voranus.
singula quid memorem, quo pacto alterna loquentes 40
umbrac cum Sagana resonarint<sup>3</sup> triste et acutum, utque lupi barbam variae cum dente colubrae
abdiderint furtim terris, et imagine cerea largior arserit ignis, et ut non testis inultus

<sup>1</sup> sint D.

<sup>2</sup> pellere Heinsius.

<sup>3</sup> resonarint Bentley : resonarent MSS.

---

<sup>a</sup> The passage is mock-heroic and based upon the famous scene in the eleventh book of the Odyssey (36 ff.), where the blood poured into a trench brought the spirits up from Erebus.

'tis not so much the thieves and beasts wont to infest the place that cause me care and trouble, as the witches who with spells and drugs vex human souls: these in no wise can I bring to naught or stop from gathering bones and harmful herbs, as soon as the roving Moon has uplifted her beauteous face.

<sup>23</sup> My own eyes have seen Canidia walk with black robe tucked up, her feet bare, her hair dishevelled, shrieking with the elder Sagana. Their sallow hue had made the two hideous to behold. Then they began to dig up the earth with their nails, and to tear a black lamb to pieces with their teeth; the blood was all poured into a trench, that therefrom they might draw the sprites, souls that would give them answers.<sup>a</sup> One image there was of wool, and one of wax, the woollen one the larger, to curb and punish the smaller; the waxen stood in suppliant guise, as if awaiting death in slavish fashion. One witch calls on Hecate, the other on fell Tisiphone. You might see serpents and hell-hounds roaming about, and the blushing Moon, that she might not witness such deeds, hiding behind the tall tombs. Nay, if I lie in aught, may my head be defiled by ravens' white ordure, and may Julius and the weakling Pediatia and the thief Voranus come to water and befoul me! Why tell each detail—how in converse with Sagana the shades made echoes sad and shrill, how the two stealthily buried in the ground a wolf's beard and the tooth of a spotted snake,<sup>b</sup> how the fire blazed higher from the image of wax, and how as witness I shuddered at the words and deeds

<sup>b</sup> With this passage cf. the famous witch scene in Macbeth iv. i.

HORACE

horruerim voces Furiarum et facta duarum ?
nam displosa sonat quantum vesica pepedi
diffissa nate ficus : at illae currere in urbem.
Canidiaes dentes, altum Saganae caliendrum excidere atque herbas atque incantata lacertis vincula cum magno risuque iocoque videres.

45

50

SATIRES, I. VIII. 45-50

of the two Furies—though not unavenged? For as loud as the noise of a bursting bladder was the crack when my fig-wood buttock split. Away they ran into town. Then amid great laughter and mirth you might see Canidia's teeth and Sagana's high wig come tumbling down, and from their arms the herbs and enchanted love-knots.

[Faint, illegible handwritten text, possibly a list or notes.]

NU
...ing
...ual
...ing to
...to
...ish
...ence
...der
...in
...the
...in
...that
...fence
...ed w
...are
...the e
...ation

IX

AN UNWELCOME COMPANION

WHILE taking a morning stroll, Horace is joined by a mere acquaintance, who insists on accompanying him, hoping through closer intimacy to secure an introduction to Maecenas. The poet vainly endeavours to shake him off, and it is only when the man's adversary in a lawsuit appears on the scene—a genuine deus ex machina—that Horace is rescued from his unhappy position.

The delightful humour, the skilful dramatic treatment of the theme, and the poet's well-established position in Maecenas's circle which is assumed, indicate that this is one of the latest Satires, in point of composition, in the first book. It may be compared with the sixth Satire, in which Horace gives an account of his introduction to Maecenas.

For the connexion of this Satire with Lucilius see Introduction C.

IX.

Ibam forte Via Sacra, sicut meus est mos nescio quid meditans nugarum, totus in illis.
accurrit<sup>1</sup> quidam notus mihi nomine tantum,
arreptaque manu, "quid agis, dulcissime rerum?"
"suaviter, ut nunc est," inquam, "et cupio omnia
quae vis." 5

Cum adsectaretur, "num quid vis?" occupo. at ille,
"noris nos," inquit; "docti sumus." hic ego, "pluris hoc," inquam, "mihi eris." misere discedere quaerens, ire modo ocius, interdum consistere, in aurem dicere nescio quid puero, cum sudor ad imos<sup>2</sup> 10
manaret talos. "o te, Bolane, cerebri felicem!" aiebam tacitus, cum quidlibet ille garriret, vicos,<sup>3</sup> urbem laudaret.

Ut illi
nil respondebam, "misere cupis," inquit, "abire;
iamdudum video; sed nil agis; usque tenebo; 15
persequar<sup>4</sup> hinc quo nunc iter est tibi." "nil opus est te

<sup>1</sup> occurrit.

<sup>2</sup> Bentley punctuated so as to take cum . . . manaret with aiebam.

<sup>3</sup> ficos, II, Charisius.

<sup>4</sup> prosequar D, II, Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> The Sacra Via was the oldest and most famous street in Rome, running into the Forum; see Via Sacra in Index.

SATIRE IX

I was strolling by chance along the Sacred Way,<sup>a</sup> musing after my fashion<sup>b</sup> on some trifle or other, and wholly intent thereon, when up there runs a man I knew only by name and seizes my hand: "How d'ye do, my dearest fellow?" "Pretty well, as times are now," I answer, "I hope you get all you want."

<sup>6</sup> As he kept dogging me, I break in with, "Nothing you want, is there?"<sup>c</sup> But he: "You must know me; I'm a scholar." To this I say, "Then I'll esteem you the more." Dreadfully eager to get away I now walk fast, at times stop short, then whisper a word in my slave's ear, while the sweat trickled down to my very ankles. "O Bolanus," I kept saying to myself, "how lucky to have your temper!" while the fellow rattled on about everything, praising the streets and the city.

<sup>13</sup> As I was making him no answer, "You're dreadfully anxious to be off," said he, "I have long seen that; but it's no use, I'll stick to you; I'll stay with you to your journey's end."

"There's no need of your being dragged about;

<sup>a</sup> In view of forte, Wickham rightly associates sicut . . . mos with meditans, not with ibam. So too Lejay.

<sup>c</sup> The question num quid vis? is a polite formula of dismissal.

HORACE

circumagi : quendam volo visere non tibi notum ;
trans Tiberim longe cubat is, prope Caesaris hortos."
" Nil habeo quod agam et non sum piger : usque sequar te."

Demitto auriculas, ut iniquae mentis asellus, 20
cum gravius dorso subiit onus.

Incipit ille :

" si bene me novi, non Viscum pluris amicum,
non Varium facies : nam quis me scribere pluris aut citius possit versus ? quis membra movere mollius ? invidet quod et Hermogenes, ego canto."

Interpellandi locus hic erat : " est tibi mater, 26 cognati, quis te salvo est opus ? "

" Haud mihi quisquam :
omnis composui."

" Felices ! nunc ego resto.
confice ; namque instat fatum mihi triste, Sabella
quod puero cecinit divina mota<sup>1</sup> anus urna : 30
' hunc neque dira venena nec hosticus auferet ensis
nec laterum dolor aut tussis nec tarda podagra ;
garrulus hunc quando consumet cumque ; loquaces,
si sapiat, vitet, simul atque adoleverit aetas.' "

Ventum erat ad Vestae, quarta iam parte diei 35
praeterita, et casu tunc respondere vadato
debebat ; quod ni fecisset, perdere litem.
" si me amas," inquit, " paulum hic ades."

<sup>1</sup> mota divina Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> These gardens, on the right bank of the Tiber, were left by Julius Caesar to the people of Rome.

<sup>b</sup> Qualifications despised by Horace ; cf. Sat. i. 4. 12 ff.

<sup>c</sup> See Sat. i. 4. 72.

I want to visit a man you do not know. He's ill abed, a long way off across the Tiber, near Caesar's gardens." <sup>a</sup>

"I've nothing to do, and I'm not a poor walker; I'll keep on with you to the end."

Down drop my poor ears like a sulky donkey's, when he has come under a load too heavy for his back.

<sup>a1</sup> Then he begins: "If I do not deceive myself, you will not think more of Viscus or of Varius as a friend than of me: for who can write more verses or write more quickly than I? <sup>b</sup> Who can dance more daintily? Even Hermogenes <sup>c</sup> might envy my singing."

<sup>28</sup> Here was my chance to break in: "Have you a mother or kindred who are dependent upon your welfare?"

"Not one; I have laid them all to rest."

"O happy they! now I am left. Finish me; for now draws near to me that sad fate, which a Sabine dame, shaking her divining urn, sang for me in my boyhood:

No wicked drug shall prove his end,
No foeman's sword shall death him send,
No cough or pleurisy or gout—
A chatterbox shall talk him out:
And if he's wise, as he grows old,
He'll steer quite clear of talkers bold.

<sup>35</sup> We had come to Vesta's temple, a fourth of the day being now past, and by chance at that hour he was due to give answer to a plaintiff, on pain of losing his suit, should he fail to appear. "As you love me," he says, "do help me here a while!"

HORACE

“ Inteream, si

aut valeo stare<sup>1</sup> aut novi civilia iura ;
 et propero quo scis.”

“ Dubius sum quid faciam,” inquit, 40

“ tene relinquam an rem.” “ me, sodes.” “ non faciam,” ille,
 et praecedere coepit. ego, ut contendere durum<sup>2</sup>
 cum victore, sequor.

“ Maecenas quomodo tecum ? ”

hinc repetit : “ paucorum hominum et mentis bene sanae.

nemo dexterius fortuna est usus. haberes 45
 magnum adiutorem, posset qui ferre secundas, hunc hominem velles si tradere ; dispeream, ni
 summosse omnis.”

“ Non isto vivimus<sup>3</sup> illic quo tu rere modo ; domus hac nec purior ulla est nec magis his aliena malis ; nil mi<sup>4</sup> officit, inquam, 50 ditior hic aut est quia doctior ; est locus uni

 cuique suus.”

“ Magnum narras, vix credibile ! ” “ atqui<sup>5</sup>

sic habet.”

“ Accendis, quare cupiam magis illi

proximus esse.”

“ Velis tantummodo : quae tua virtus, expugnabis ; et est qui vinci possit, eoque 55

 difficilis aditus primos habet.”

“ Haud mihi deero :

muneribus servos corrumpam ; non, hodie si
 exclusus fuero, desistam ; tempora quaeram,

<sup>1</sup> ista re Verrall.                      <sup>2</sup> durum est.                      <sup>3</sup> vivitur.

<sup>4</sup> mi omitted by VK Goth.                      <sup>5</sup> atque, II.

"Confound me if I either have strength to stand up,<sup>a</sup> or know the laws of the land! and besides I must hurry, you know where."

"I wonder," said he, "what I ought to do, whether to leave my suit or you." "Me, I pray!" "No, I won't," said he, and started to go ahead. As for me, since 'tis hard to fight with one's master, I follow.

<sup>43</sup> "How stands Maecenas with you," he thus begins afresh, "a man of few friends and right good sense? No one ever made wiser use of his luck. You might have a strong backer, who could be your understudy, if you would introduce your humble servant. Hang me, if you wouldn't find that you had cleared the field!"

"We don't live there on such terms as you think. No house is cleaner or more free from such intrigues than that. It never hurts me, I say, that one is richer or more learned than I. Each has his own place."

"That's a strange tale, I can scarce believe it."

"And yet 'tis so."

"You add flame to my desire to get closer to him."

"You have only to wish it; such is your valour, you will carry the fort. He's a man who can be won, and that is why he makes the first approaches so difficult."

"I'll not fail myself. I'll bribe his slaves. If shut out to-day, I'll not give up. I'll look for the <sup>a</sup> As he would have to do in court. That this is the sense of stare seems to follow from valeo. Some, however, take stare as a synonym of adesse, "to appear in court," or as meaning "to be successful," i.e. in law.

HORACE

occurram in triviis, deducam. nil sine magno vita labore dedit mortalibus."

Haec dum agit, ecce 60

Fuscus Aristius occurrit, mihi carus et illum qui pulchre nosset. consistimus. "unde venis?" et
"quo tendis?" rogat et respondet. vellere coepi et pressare<sup>1</sup> manu lentissima brachia, nutans, distorquens oculos, ut me eriperet. male salsus 65
ridens dissimulare; meum iecur urere bilis.<sup>2</sup>
"certe nescio quid secreto velle loqui te aiebas mecum."

"Memini bene, sed meliore tempore dicam; hodie tricesima sabbata: vin tu curtis Iudaeis oppedere?"

"Nulla mihi," inquam, 70

"religio est."

"At mi; sum paulo infirmior, unus multorum. ignosces; alias loquar."

Huncine solem

tam nigrum surrexe mihi! fugit improbus ac me
sub cultro linquit.

Casu venit obuius illi

adversarius, et, "quo tu turpissime?" magna 75
inclamat voce, et "licet antestari?" ego vero oppono auriculam. rapit in ius; clamor utrimque, undique concursus. sic me servavit Apollo.

---

<sup>1</sup> pressare DK, Porph.: prensare V, Bentley.    <sup>2</sup> bellis, Il.

<sup>a</sup> Probably a quotation from some poet. The sentiment is found as early as Hesiod, Works and Days, 287.

<sup>b</sup> This is probably pure nonsense, no particular Sabbath being intended. Perhaps, however, the Sabbath fell on the thirtieth of the month.

<sup>c</sup> A bystander, consenting to act as witness, allowed the fitting time ; I'll meet him in the streets ; I'll escort him home.

Life grants no boon to man without much toil." <sup>a</sup>

<sup>60</sup> While he is thus running on, lo ! there comes up Aristius Fuscus, a dear friend of mine, who knew the fellow right well. We halt. " Whence come you ? Whither go you ? " he asks and answers. I begin to twitch his cloak and squeeze his arms—they were quite unfeeling—nodding and winking hard for him to save me. The cruel joker laughed, pretending not to understand. I grew hot with anger. " Surely you said there was something you wanted to tell me in private."

" I mind it well, but I'll tell you at a better time. To-day is the thirtieth Sabbath.<sup>b</sup> Would you affront the circumcised Jews ? "

" I have no scruples," say I.

" But I have. I'm a somewhat weaker brother, one of the many. You will pardon me ; I'll talk another day."

To think so black a sun as this has shone for me ! The rascal runs away and leaves me under the knife.

<sup>74</sup> It now chanced that the plaintiff came face to face with his opponent. " Where go you, you scoundrel ? " he loudly shouts, and to me : " May I call you as witness ? " I offer my ear to touch.<sup>c</sup> He hurries the man to court. There is shouting here and there, and on all sides a running to and fro. Thus was I saved by Apollo.<sup>d</sup> litigant to touch the tip of his ear. The custom was an old one and is referred to in Plautus.

<sup>d</sup> Apollo was the god who befriended poets. The expression comes, however, from Homer (Iliad, xx. 443), τὸν δ' ἐξήρπαξεν Ἀπόλλων, words which Lucilius had also used.

X

ON SATIRE

Horace resumes a discussion of the main subject of his fourth Satire, which had brought down considerable censure upon him from the critics, who upheld the excellence of early Latin poetry, and to these he now makes reply.

He reminds them that, while he had found fault with Lucilius's verse, he had also credited it with great satiric power. In this he was quite consistent, for one may admire good mimes without holding them to be good poems. You may make people laugh, but you must also have a terse style and a proper mixture of the grave and the gay, such as is seen in the robust writers of Old Attic Comedy, whom Hermogenes and his school never read. But Lucilius is admired for his skill in blending Greek and Latin. "Nonsense!" cries Horace, "such a mixture is a serious blemish, and no more acceptable in poetry than in oratory" (1-30).

The poet here confesses that at one time he had thought of writing in Greek instead of Latin, but realized in time that this would be like carrying faggots to the forest (31-35).

So while Bibaculus essays something grand and lofty, Horace is less ambitious and turns to a more modest field. If we survey contemporary literature, comedy is pre-empted by Fundanius; Pollio has won fame in tragedy and Varius in the epic; Virgil is simple and charming in his pastorals. Satire alone was open to Horace, for Varro Atacinus and others had tried it and failed, while Horace has met with success, however short he may come of the first in the field (36-49).

SATIRES, I. x.

It is true that Horace had criticized Lucilius, just as Lucilius had pointed out defects in Accius and Ennius. His verse is faulty—his stream is muddy, he lacks finish, he wrote too freely. If we were to compare him with a writer who is carving out a new species of verse quite untouched by the Greeks, we might attribute to him some polish, but the fact remains that had he lived in the Augustan age, he would have filed away his roughnesses, and learned "the last and greatest art, the art to blot" (50-71).

A writer should aim at pleasing, not the multitude, but a small circle of good critics. If he wins their approval, he may bid the cheap teachers of the lecture-room go hang! (72-91).

With this statement of his conviction, Horace puts the finishing touch to his First Book (92).

In this satire Horace is a spokesman for the chief writers of the Augustan era, setting forth some of their ideals in contrast with the ignorance and vulgarity of popular scribblers, as represented by men like Tigellius. Among the requisites of good satire Horace speaks of the appropriate use of humour, together with the qualities of brevity, clearness, purity of diction and smoothness of composition, all of which are characteristic of the so-called plain style, or genus tenue, of poetry as of oratory. (For a full discussion see papers by Hendrickson and Ullman; also Fiske, Lucilius and Horace, pp. 336 ff.)

X.

[Lucili, quam sis mendosus, teste Catone
defensore tuo pervincam, qui male factos emendare parat versus ; hoc lenius ille,
quo melior vir est, longe subtilior illo,
qui multum puer et loris et funibus udis
exoratus, ut esset opem qui ferre poetis antiquis posset contra fastidia nostra, grammaticorum equitum doctissimus. ut redeam
illuc : ]<sup>1</sup>

Nempe incomposito dixi pede currere versus Lucili. quis tam Lucili fautor inepte est, ut non hoc fateatur ? at idem, quod sale multo
urbem defricuit, charta laudatur eadem.

Nec tamen hoc tribuens dederim quoque cetera ;
nam<sup>2</sup> sic
et Laberi mimos ut pulchra poemata mirer.
ergo non satis est risu diducere<sup>3</sup> rictum.

<sup>1</sup> Ll. 1-8. These awkward verses are found in MSS. of class II only, but are not commented on by the scholiasts. Persius, an imitator of Horace, begins his third satire with nempe. In l. 4, vir, used by the writer as a long syllable, appears as vir et in a few later MSS.

<sup>2</sup> num a M, II.

<sup>3</sup> deducere K, II.

<sup>a</sup> The first eight lines are regarded as spurious, and the only reason for reproducing them is that they are given in many MSS., though not in the best. The Cato referred to is Valerius Cato, a poet and critic of the late Republic, but who the grammaticorum equitum doctissimus was is not known.

SATIRE X

[Lucilius, how faulty you are I will prove clearly by the witness of Cato, your own advocate, who is setting to work to remove faults from your ill-wrought verses. This task is done so much more gently by him, as he is a better man, of much finer taste than the other, who as a boy was oftentimes gently entreated by the lash and moist ropes, so that later he might give aid to the poets of old against our present daintiness, when he had become the most learned of pedagogic knights. But to return <sup>a</sup> :]

<sup>1</sup> To be sure I did say <sup>b</sup> that the verses of Lucilius run on with halting foot. Who is a partisan of Lucilius so in-and-out of season as not to confess this? And yet on the self-same page the self-same poet is praised because he rubbed the city down with much salt.

<sup>5</sup> Yet, while granting this virtue, I would not also allow him every other; for on those terms I should also have to admire the mimes of Laberius as pretty poems.<sup>c</sup> Hence it is not enough to make your It is surely impossible "by reaching back over the relative clause intervening" to refer these words to Cato, as does Hendrickson, who upholds the genuineness of these verses.

<sup>b</sup> In Sat. i. 4, which may be compared with this Satire throughout.

<sup>c</sup> Mimes were dramatic scenes from low life, largely farcical and grotesque in character. Laberius, a Roman knight, who was compelled by Julius Caesar to act in his own mimes, was no longer living when Horace wrote.

HORACE

auditoris ; et est quaedam tamen hic quoque virtus :
 est brevitate opus, ut currat sententia, neu se impediatur verbis lassas onerantibus auris ; 10
 et sermone opus est modo tristi, saepe iocoso, defendente vicem modo rhetoris atque poetae,
 interdum urbani,<sup>1</sup> parcentis viribus atque
 extenuantis eas consulto, ridiculum acri fortius et melius magnas plerumque secat res. 15
 illi scripta quibus comoedia prisca viris est
 hoc stabant, hoc sunt imitandi ; quos neque pulcher Hermogenes umquam legit neque simius iste
 nil praeter Calvum et doctus cantare Catullum.
 "At magnum fecit, quod verbis Graeca Latinis 20
 miscuit."

O seri studiorum, quine putetis difficile et mirum, Rhodio quod Pitholeonti contigit !

"At sermo lingua concinnus utraque
 suavior, ut<sup>2</sup> Chio nota si commixta Falerni est."

Cum versus facias, te ipsum percontor, an et cum 25
 dura tibi peragenda rei sit causa Petilli ?
 scilicet oblitus<sup>3</sup> patriaeque patrisque, Latine<sup>4</sup>
 cum Pedius causas exsudet Publicola atque

<sup>1</sup> urbane, II.

<sup>2</sup> et, II.

<sup>3</sup> oblitus Bentley ; so Holder, Vollmer.

<sup>4</sup> Latine comm. Cruq. : Latini V, I, Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> This, according to Porphyrio, is the Demetrius mentioned in l. 90 below. Hendrickson thinks it is Bibaculus (C.P. xii. p. 87).

<sup>b</sup> For cantare "to satirize" cf. Sat. ii. 1. 46. These words are not, as commonly believed, said in depreciation of Calvus and Catullus, for there was no opposition between them and the Augustan poets. See Rand, "Catullus and the Augustans," Harv. St. xvii. p. 28, and Ullman, "Horace, Catullus, and Tigellius," C.P. x. pp. 270 ff.

hearer grin with laughter—though even in that there is some merit. You need terseness, that the thought may run on, and not become entangled in verbiage that weighs upon wearied ears. You also need a style, now grave now gay, in keeping with the rôle, now of orator or poet, at times of the wit, who holds his strength in check and husbands it with wisdom. Jestings oft cuts hard knots more forcefully and effectively than gravity. Thereby those great men who wrote Old Comedy won success; therein we should imitate them—writers whom the fop Hermogenes has never read, nor that ape,<sup>a</sup> whose skill lies solely in droning Calvus and Catullus.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>20</sup> But that was a great feat," you say, "his mixing of Greek and Latin words."

O ye late learners! <sup>c</sup> ye who really think that a hard and wondrous knack, which Pitholeon of Rhodes achieved!

"But a style, where both tongues make a happy blend, has more charm, as when the Falernian brand is mixed with Chian."

<sup>25</sup> In your verse-making only (I put it to yourself), or does the rule also hold good when you have to plead the long, hard case of the defendant Petillius? Would you forsooth forget fatherland, and father, and, while Pedius Publicola and Corvinus sweat over their causes in Latin, would <sup>a</sup> Seri studiorum is a translation of ὀψιμαθεῖς, used of those who make a show of their newly acquired knowledge. In the words following, -ne should not be regarded as interrogative. It is an affirmative particle, as Priscian held it to be. Nothing is known about Pitholeon, but Bentley plausibly supposed he was the same as Pitholaus, who assailed Julius Caesar in verse (Suet. Jul. 75).

HORACE

Corvinus, patriis intermiscere petita
verba foris malis, Canusini more bilinguis ? 30

Atque<sup>1</sup> ego cum Graecos facerem, natus mare citra, versiculos, vetuit me tali voce Quirinus,
post mediam noctem visus, cum somnia vera :

"In silvam non ligna feras insanius ac si
magnas Graecorum malis implere catervas." 35

Turgidus Alpinus iugulat dum Memnona dumque defingit<sup>2</sup> Rheni luteum caput, haec ego ludo, quae neque in aede sonent certantia iudice Tarpa,
nec redeant iterum atque iterum spectanda<sup>3</sup> theatris.

Arguta meretrice potes Davoque Chremeta 40
eludente senem comis garrire libellos unus vivorum, Fundani ; Pollio regum facta canit pede ter percusso ; forte epos acer, ut nemo, Varius ducit ; molle atque facetum Vergilio adnuerunt<sup>4</sup> gaudentes rure Camenae. 45
hoc erat, experto frustra Varrone Atacino atque quibusdam aliis, melius quod scribere possem,<sup>5</sup> inventore minor ; neque ego illi detrahere ausim
haerentem capiti cum multa laude coronam.

<sup>1</sup> atqui Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> defingit, I: diffingit K, II, Porph.

<sup>3</sup> spectata K, II.

<sup>4</sup> adnuerant a : adnuerint D.

<sup>5</sup> possim, II.

<sup>a</sup> At Canusium, in Apulia, both Greek and Oscan were spoken.

<sup>b</sup> A sarcastic reference to M. Furius Bibaculus, who wrote an epic on Caesar's Gallic Wars, and also an Aethiopsis, in which Memnon is slain by Achilles. The references would be more intelligible if the poems of Bibaculus were extant, but his bombastic style is clearly parodied. See further, Sat. ii. 5. 41.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. the Temple of the Muses, where new poetry could be read. For Tarpa see Index, under Maecius.

<sup>d</sup> A reference to New Comedy, such as that of Terence.

you prefer to jumble with your native speech words imported from abroad, like the Canusian's jargon <sup>a</sup> ?

<sup>31</sup> I, too, though born this side of the sea, once took to writing verses in Greek; but after midnight, when dreams are true, Quirinus appeared and forbade me with words like these : " 'Tis just as foolish to carry timber to a wood as to wish to swell the crowded ranks of the Greeks."

<sup>36</sup> So while the pompous poet of the Alps murders Memnon and botches with mud the head of the Rhine,<sup>b</sup> I am toying with these trifles, which are neither to be heard in the Temple<sup>c</sup> as competing for Tarpa's verdict, nor are to come back again and again to be witnessed on the stage.

<sup>40</sup> You alone of living poets, Fundanius, can charm us with the chit-chat of comedies, where the artful mistress and Davus fool old Chremes.<sup>d</sup> In measure of triple beat Pollio sings of kings' exploits.<sup>e</sup> Surpassing all in spirit, Varius moulds the valorous epic.<sup>f</sup> To Virgil the Muses rejoicing in rural life have granted simplicity and charm.<sup>g</sup> This satire, which Varro of the Atax and some others had vainly tried, was what I could write with more success, though falling short of the inventor<sup>h</sup>; nor would I dare to wrest from him the crown that clings to his brow with so much glory.

<sup>a</sup> Pollio used the iambic trimeter in his tragedies.

<sup>f</sup> This was written before Virgil had composed his Aeneid.

<sup>g</sup> A reference to the Eclogues. Professor C. N. Jackson has won wide acceptance for his view that in molle atque facetum, commonly rendered as "tenderness and grace," Horace refers to distinctive features of the genus tenue, or plain style of writing (Harv. St. xxv. pp. 117 ff.).

<sup>h</sup> Lucilius.

HORACE

At<sup>1</sup> dixi fluere hunc lutulentum, saepe ferentem 50
 plura quidem tollenda relinquendis. age, quaeso,<sup>2</sup>
 tu nihil in magno doctus reprehendis Homero?
 nil comis tragici mutat Lucilius Acci?
 non ridet versus Enni gravitate minores,<sup>3</sup> cum de se loquitur non ut maiore reprensis? 55
 quid vetat et nosmet Lucili scripta legentis
 quaerere, num illius, num rerum dura negarit versiculos natura magis factos<sup>4</sup> et euntis mollius, ac<sup>5</sup> si quis, pedibus quid claudere senis/hoc tantum contentus, amet scripsisse ducentos 60 ante cibum versus, totidem cenatus? Etrusci quale fuit Cassi rapido ferventius amni ingenium, capsis quem fama est esse librisque ambustum propriis.

Fuerit Lucilius, inquam,
comis et urbanus,<sup>6</sup> fuerit limatior idem 65
quam rudis et Graecis intacti carminis auctor
 quamque poetarum seniorum turba: sed ille, si foret hoc nostrum fato delapsus<sup>7</sup> in aevum, detereret sibi multa, recideret omne quod ultra perfectum traheretur, et in versu faciendo 70
 saepe caput scaberet, vivos et roderet unguis.

Saepe stilum vertas, iterum quae digna legi sint
scripturus, neque te ut miretur turba labores.

<sup>1</sup> at or ad] et Alψ.

<sup>2</sup> quaero, I.

<sup>3</sup> minoris Goth.

<sup>4</sup> altos Goth.

<sup>5</sup> et a.

<sup>6</sup> urbanis, II.

<sup>7</sup> delapsus V, adopted by Vollmer and Lejay: dilatus one Bland., Bentley and generally accepted: dilapsus ms.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. hexameters.

<sup>b</sup> On Cassius see p. 277, note <sup>b</sup>.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 4. 90. The coincidence implies that there the hic is Lucilius. So Tenney Frank in A.J.P. xlv. (1925) p. 72. <sup>d</sup> Cf. Quintilian, x. 1. 93 "satura tota nostra est."

<sup>e</sup> The phrase stilum vertere means to erase what has been written on the wax tablet, because the blunt end of the

<sup>50</sup> But I did say his stream runs muddy, and often carries more that you would rather remove than leave behind. Come, pray, do you, a scholar, criticize nothing in the great Homer? Does your genial Lucilius find nothing to change in the tragedies of Accius? Does he not laugh at the verses of Ennius lacking in dignity, though he speaks of himself as no greater than those he has blamed? And as we read the writings of Lucilius, what forbids us, too, to raise the question whether it was his own genius, or whether it was the harsh nature of his themes that denied him verses more finished and easier in their flow (than if one were to put his thoughts into six feet,<sup>a</sup> and, content with this alone, were proud of having written two hundred lines before and two hundred after supping? Such was the gift of Tuscan Cassius,<sup>b</sup> more headstrong than a rushing river, whose own books and cases, so 'tis told us, made his funeral pile.

<sup>64</sup> Grant, say I, that Lucilius was genial and witty<sup>c</sup>: grant that he was also more polished than you would expect one to be who was creating a new style quite untouched by the Greeks,<sup>d</sup> and more polished than the crowd of older poets: yet, had he fallen by fate upon this our day, he would smooth away much of his work, would prune off all that trailed beyond the proper limit, and as he wrought his verse he would oft scratch his head and gnaw his nails to the quick.

<sup>72</sup> Often must you turn your pen to erase,<sup>e</sup> if you hope to write something worth reading, and you must not strive to catch the wonder of the crowd, stylus was used to smooth out the surface traced by the sharp end.

HORACE

contentus paucis lectoribus. an tua demens vilibus<sup>1</sup> in ludis dictari carmina malis? 76

non ego; nam satis est equitem mihi plaudere, ut audax,

contemptis aliis, explosa Arbuscula dixit.

Men moveat cimex Pantilius, aut cruciet quod
vellicet absentem Demetrius, aut quod ineptus Fannius Hermogenis laedat convixa Tigelli? 80

Plotius et Varius, Maecenas Vergiliusque, Valgius et probet haec Octavius optimus atque Fuscus et haec utinam Viscorum laudet uterque!

ambitione relegata te dicere possum,

Pollio, te, Messalla, tuo cum fratre, simulque 85
vos, Bibule et Servi, simul his te, candide Furni, compluris alios, doctos ego quos et amicos

prudens praetereo; quibus haec, sint qualiacumque.
adridere velim, doliturus, si placeant spe deterius nostra. Demetri, teque, Tigelli, 90 discipularum<sup>2</sup> inter iubeo plorare cathedras.

I, puer, atque meo citus haec subscribe libello.

<sup>1</sup> milibus ψλλ.    <sup>2</sup> discipularum mss. Porph.: discipulorum.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Aristius Fuscus. Octavius is Octavius Musa, poet and historian.

<sup>b</sup> The phrase iubeo plorare is a satiric substitute for iubeo valere ("I bid farewell to"). Cf. οἰμωξε in Aristophanes, as in Plut. 257.

<sup>c</sup> In this paragraph Horace contrasts writers of low literary standards, represented by Tigellius, with members of the three circles of Maecenas, Pollio and Messalla. He himself, like Virgil, belongs to the circle of Maecenas. Tibullus, a member of Messalla's circle, is perhaps at this time too young to be named. (See Ullman, C.P. x. (1910) pp. 270 ff.)

<sup>d</sup> The last verse, addressed to the slave who acts as secretary, serves as an epilogue to the whole book. "The farewell (or rather 'fare-ill') to Tigellius is the last shot in the war, and Tigellius is never mentioned again. The last but be content with the few as your readers. What, would you be so foolish as to want your poems dictated in common schools? Not so I. "Tis enough if the knights applaud me"—to quote dauntless Arbuscula's scornful remark, when the rest of the house hissed her.
122

<sup>78</sup> Am I to be stung by that louse Pantilius? Or tortured because Demetrius carps at me behind my back, or because silly Fannius, who sponges on Hermogenes Tigellius, girds at me? Let but Plotius and Varius approve of these verses; let Maecenas, Virgil, and Valgius; let Octavius and Fuscus,<sup>a</sup> best of men; and let but the Viscus brothers give their praise! With no desire to flatter, I may name you, Pollio; you, Messalla, and your brother; also you, Bibulus and Servius; also you, honest Furnius, and many another scholar and friend, whom I purposely pass over. In their eyes I should like these verses, such as they are, to find favour, and I should be grieved if their pleasure were to fall short of my hopes. But you, Demetrius, and you, Tigellius, I bid you go whine<sup>b</sup> amidst the easy chairs of your pupils in petticoats!<sup>c</sup>

<sup>92</sup> Go,<sup>d</sup> lad, and quickly add these lines to my little book.<sup>e</sup>

line of the first book represents the triumph of an artistic ideal" (Ullman, loc. cit. p. 279).

* In connexion with this Satire reference may be made to articles mentioned on p. 61, as well as to the following: Hendrickson, G. L., "Horace and Lucilius. A Study of Horace, Serm. i. 10," in Gildersleeve Studies, pp. 151 ff.; "Horace and Valerius Flaccus" (three articles), C.P. xi. and xii.; B. L. Ullman, "Horace, Catullus and Tigellius," C.P. x. pp. 270 ff.; E. K. Rand, "Catullus and the Augustans," Harv. St. xvii. pp. 15 ff.; C. F. Jackson, "Molle atque Facetum," Harv. St. xxiv. pp. 117 ff.

BOOK II

I

HORACE'S PARTING SHOT AT HIS CRITICS

THIS Satire continues the subject of the fourth and tenth Satires of the First Book. That book had aroused much criticism, which the poet meets in this prologue to his Second Book.

The Satire assumes the form of an imaginary dialogue between Horace and C. Trebatius Testa, a famous lawyer of Cicero's time, whose legal advice on the subject of satiric writing Horace is professedly anxious to secure. Trebatius advises him to give up writing altogether, or if that is impossible, to take up epic poetry (1-12).

"I have no gift for the epic," says Horace, "and yet I must write, and must write satire, even as Lucilius used to do. I belong to a frontier stock but am armed for defence, not offence, using the pen when attacked as naturally as the bull its horns" (13-60).

TREBATIUS. Then you will come to grief. Some of your great friends will freeze you to death.

HORACE. Did those of Lucilius desert him, when he attacked great and small? Nay, he lived on intimate terms with Scipio and Laelius, and though

SATIRES, II. I.

I fall short of him in social rank and ability, yet I, too, have illustrious friends (60-79).

TRE. But let me remind you of the law. You are forbidden to write bad—that is, libellous—verses against anyone.

HOR. Of course not. But what if they are good, like mine, and win Caesar's approval?

TRE. Then such a charge will be laughed out of court (79-86).

In view of Caesaris invicti of l. 11, it would seem that this Satire was written after the Battle of Actium, and therefore shortly before the publication of this Second Book in 30 B.C. Horace is now thirty-five years of age and has won recognition and an assured position in Roman literature. He no longer finds it necessary to defend his satire very seriously, but, as Lejay, in his introduction to this Satire, has clearly shown, "the legal conditions under which satire could be produced in the Augustan age formed a very real restriction upon the freedom of speech traditional in satire. . . . There is a touch of serious anxiety beneath the jest upon the mala and bona carmina with which the Satire closes" (Fiske, Lucilius and Horace, p. 370).

LIBER SECUNDUS

I.

Sunt quibus in satura videar<sup>1</sup> nimis acer et ultra legem tendere opus ; sine nervis altera, quidquid composui, pars esse putat similisque meorum mille die versus deduci<sup>2</sup> posse. Trebati, quid faciam, praescribe.

“ Quiescas.”

Ne faciam, inquis, omnino versus ?

“ Aio.”

Peream male, si non optimum erat ; verum nequeo dormire.

“ Ter uncti
transnanto Tiberim, somno quibus est opus alto, irriguumque mero sub noctem corpus habento.
aut si tantus amor scribendi te rapit, aude Caesaris invicti res dicere, multa laborum
praemia laturus.”

Cupidum, pater optime, vires
deficiunt : neque enim quivis horrentia pilis agmina nec fracta pereuntis cuspidē Gallos aut labentis equo describat<sup>3</sup> volnera Parthi.

<sup>1</sup> videor φψ.

<sup>2</sup> diduci, II.

<sup>3</sup> describat aEM : -it D, II : -et K.

---

* We may infer from one letter of Cicero's (Ad fam. vii. 22)
126

BOOK II

SATIRE I

HORACE. There are some critics who think that I am too savage in my satire and strain the work beyond lawful bounds. The other half of them hold that all I have composed is "nerveless," and that verses as good as mine could be turned out a thousand a day. Give me advice, Trebatius. What am I to do?

TREBATIUS. Take a rest.

HOR. Not write verses at all, you mean?

TRE. Yes.

HOR. Confound me, if that would not be best! But I cannot sleep.

TRE. Let those who need sound sleep oil themselves and swim across the Tiber thrice; then, as night comes on, let them steep themselves in wine.<sup>a</sup> Or if such a passion for writing carries you away, bravely tell of the feats of Caesar, the unvanquished. Many a reward for your pains will you gain.

HOR. Would that I could, good father, but my strength fails me. Not everyone can paint ranks bristling with lances, or Gauls falling with spear-heads shattered, or wounded Parthian slipping from his horse.

that Trebatius was a hard drinker, and we learn from another (ib. vii. 10) that he was fond of swimming, studiosissimus homo natandi.

HORACE

“Attamen et iustum poteras et scribere fortem, Scipiadam ut sapiens Lucilius.”

Haud mihi dero,
cum res ipsa feret : nisi dextro tempore, Flacci
verba per attentam non ibunt Caesaris aurem, cui male si palpere, recalcitrat<sup>1</sup> undique tutus. 20

“Quanto rectius hoc, quam tristi laedere versu Pantolabum scurram Nomentanumque<sup>2</sup> nepotem, cum sibi quisque timet, quamquam est intactus, et odit.”

Quid faciam ? saltat Milonius, ut semel icto
accessit fervor capiti numerusque lucernis ; 25
Castor gaudet equis, ovo prognatus eodem
pugnis ; quot capitum vivunt, totidem studiorum
milia : me pedibus delectat claudere verba Lucili ritu, nostrum melioris utroque.
ille velut fidis arcana sodalibus olim 30
credebat libris, neque si male cesserat,<sup>3</sup> usquam decurrrens alio, neque si bene ; quo fit, ut omnis
votiva pateat veluti descripta tabella
vita senis.

Sequor hunc, Lucanus an Apulus, anceps :
nam Venusinus arat finem sub utrumque colonus, 35
missus ad hoc, pulsus, vetus est ut fama, Sabellis, quo ne per vacuum Romano incurreret hostis, sive quod Apula gens seu quod Lucania bellum
incuteret violenta. sed hic stilus haud petet ultro

<sup>1</sup> recalcitret.

<sup>2</sup> -que] -ve, II, Porph.

<sup>3</sup> cesserat K : gesserat MSS.

---

<sup>a</sup> A line quoted, with change of case, from Sat. i. 8. 11.

<sup>b</sup> Coming as he does of frontier stock, Horace humorously

TRE. But you might write of himself, at once just and valiant, as wise Lucilius did of Scipio.

HOR. I will not fail myself, when the occasion itself prompts. Only at an auspicious moment will the words of a Flaccus find with Caesar entrance to an attentive ear. Stroke the steed clumsily and back he kicks, at every point on his guard.

<sup>21</sup> TRE. How much wiser this than with bitter verse to wound "Pantolabus, the parasite, and spendthrift Nomentanus,"<sup>a</sup> whereupon everybody is afraid for himself, though untouched, and hates you.

<sup>24</sup> HOR. What am I to do? Milonius starts a-dancing once the heat has mounted to his wine-smitten brain and the lamps twinkle double. Castor finds joy in horses; his brother, born from the same egg, in boxing. For every thousand living souls, there are as many thousand tastes. My own delight is to shut up words in feet, as did Lucilius, a better judge than either of us. He in olden days would trust his secrets to his books, as if to faithful friends, never turning elsewhere for recourse, whether things went well with him or ill. So it comes that the old poet's whole life is open to view, as if painted on a votive tablet.

<sup>34</sup> He it is I follow—I, a Lucanian or Apulian,<sup>b</sup> I know not which, for the settlers in Venusia plough close to the borders of both lands. Thither they were sent, as the old story goes, when the Samnites were driven out, and to this end, that no foe might ever assail the Romans through an open frontier, whether the Apulian race or whether Lucania lawlessly threatened any war. But this, both my dagger claims that this is why he is so pugnacious and takes to satire.

HORACE

quemquam animantem et me veluti custodiet ensis 40
 vagina tectus ; quem cur destringere<sup>1</sup> coner tutus ab infestis latronibus ? o pater et rex Iuppiter, ut pereat positum robigine telum,<sup>2</sup> nec quisquam noceat cupido mihi pacis ! at ille, 45
 qui me commorit (melius non tangere, clamo),
 flebit et insignis tota cantabitur urbe.

Cervius iratus leges minitatur et urnam,
 Canidia Albuci quibus est inimica venenum, grande malum Turius, si quid se iudice certes.<sup>3</sup> ut quo quisque valet suspectos terreat, utque 50
 imperet hoc natura potens, sic collige mecum :
 dente lupus, cornu taurus petit ; unde, nisi intus monstratum ? Scaevae vivacem crede nepoti matrem ; nil faciet sceleris pia dextera : mirum, ut neque calce lupus quemquam neque dente petit<sup>4</sup> bos :

sed mala<sup>5</sup> tollet anum vitiato melle cicuta.
 ne longum faciam : seu me tranquilla senectus
 expectat seu mors atris circumvolat alis, dives, inops, Romae, seu fors ita iusserit, exsul,
 quisquis erit vitae scribam color.

“ O puer, ut sis 60
 vitalis metuo, et maiorum ne quis amicus frigore te feriat.” quid ? cum est Lucilius ausus primus in hunc operis componere carmina morem, detrahare et pellem, nitidus qua quisque per ora

<sup>1</sup> distringere, II.

<sup>2</sup> telum MSS. : ferrum Priscian.

<sup>3</sup> quis . . . certet DK, II.

<sup>4</sup> petat Dφψl.

<sup>5</sup> mala MSS. : male EM.

---

<sup>a</sup> The stilus, a pointed instrument, could be used either as a pen or as a weapon. For the latter sense cf. stiletto.

SATIRES, II. 1. 40-64

and pen,<sup>a</sup> shall never of my free will assail any man alive but shall protect me, like a sword laid up in its sheath. Why should I try to draw it, while I am safe from robbers' assaults? O Jupiter, Sire and King, let perish with rust the discarded weapon, and let no man injure me, a lover of peace! But if one stir me up ("Better not touch me!" I shout), he shall smart for it and have his name sung up and down the town.

<sup>47</sup> Cervius, when angry, threatens his foes with laws and the judge's urn; Canidia with the poison of Albucius; Turius with a big fine, if you go to court when he is judge. How everyone, using the weapon in which he is strong, tries to frighten those whom he fears, and how this is at Dame Nature's own command, you must infer—as I do—thus: the wolf attacks with fangs, the bull with horns—how was each taught, if not by instinct? Suppose you entrust to the spendthrift Scaeva a long-lived mother: his filial hand will commit no crime. How marvellous! no more so than that a wolf assails none with his heels, nor an ox with his teeth; but deadly hemlock in drugged honey will carry the old crone off. To be brief—whether peaceful age awaits me, or Death hovers round with sable wings, rich or poor, in Rome, or, if chance so bid, in exile, whatever the colour<sup>b</sup> of my life, write I must.

<sup>60</sup> TRE. My lad, I fear your life will be brief. One of your great friends will strike you with a killing frost.

HOR. What! when Lucilius first dared to compose poems after this kind, and to strip off the skin with which each strutted all bedecked before the eyes of <sup>b</sup> i.e. bright or dark, with good or bad fortune.

HORACE

cederet, introrsum turpis, num Laelius et<sup>1</sup> qui 65
duxit ab oppressa meritum Karthagine nomen ingenio offensi aut laeso doluere Metello famosisque Lupo cooperto versibus ? atqui primores populi arripuit populumque tributim,<sup>2</sup> scilicet uni aequus Virtuti atque eius amicis. 70
quin ubi se a volgo et scaena in secreta remorant virtus Scipiadae et mitis sapientia Laeli, nugari cum illo et discincti ludere, donec decoqueretur holus, soliti. quicquid sum ego, quamvis

infra Lucili censum ingeniumque, tamen me 75
cum magnis vixisse invita fatebitur usque invidia, et fragili quaerens inlidere dentem offendet solido, nisi quid tu, docte Trebati, dissentis.

“ Equidem nihil hinc diffindere<sup>3</sup> possum.
sed tamen ut monitus caveas, ne forte negoti 80
incutiat tibi quid sanctarum inscitia legum :
si mala condiderit in quem quis carmina, ius est
iudiciumque.”

Esto, si quis mala ; sed bona si quis
iudice condiderit laudatus Caesare ? si quis opprobriis dignum latraverit, integer ipse ? 85
“ Solventur risu tabulae, tu missus abibis.”

<sup>1</sup> et DK : aut aE.

<sup>2</sup> tributim aK : tributum DE.

<sup>3</sup> diffindere VDM, II, Porph. : diffingere a : diffundere E :
diffidere.

<sup>a</sup> The younger Scipio Africanus.

<sup>b</sup> In l. 82 Horace uses the very phraseology of the XII.
Tables as cited by Pliny, “ qui malum carmen incantassit ” (Hist. Nat. xxviii. 4. 18), and Cicero, “ sive carmen condi-

men, though foul within, was Laelius offended at his wit, or he who took his well-earned name from conquered Carthage?<sup>a</sup> Or were they hurt because Metellus was smitten, and Lupus buried under a shower of lampooning verses? Yet he laid hold upon the leaders of the people, and upon the people in their tribes, kindly in fact only to Virtue and her friends. Nay, when virtuous Scipio and the wise and gentle Laelius withdrew into privacy from the throng and theatre of life, they would turn to folly, and flinging off restraint would indulge with him in sport while their dish of herbs was on the boil. Such as I am, however far beneath Lucilius in rank and native gifts, yet Envy, in spite of herself, will ever admit that I have lived with the great, and, while trying to strike her tooth on something soft, will dash upon what is solid. But maybe you, learned Trebatius, disagree.

<sup>79</sup> TRE. Indeed, I can take no exception to this. But for all that, let me warn you to beware, lest haply ignorance of our sacred laws bring you into trouble. If a man write ill verses against another,<sup>b</sup> there is a right of action and redress by law.

HOR. To be sure, in case of ill verses. But what if a man compose good verses, and Caesar's judgement approve? If he has barked at someone who deserves abuse, himself all blameless?

TRE. The case will fall through with a laugh.<sup>c</sup> You will get off scot-free.

disset" (De republica, iv. 10. 12). Horace is, of course, punning on the use of malum, which can mean both "libellous" and "of bad quality."

<sup>c</sup> Literally, "the official records will be cancelled." See Jefferson Elmore, C.R. xxxiii. p. 102.

II

A DISCOURSE ON PLAIN LIVING

HORACE puts the discourse in the mouth of Ofellus, an old neighbour of the poet's, and a representative of the simplicity and other sturdy qualities of the Apulian farmers. As a whole, however, the Satire is mainly a collection of commonplaces taken from the teachings of the various philosophic schools, though the theme and even the mode of handling it were probably suggested by Lucilius. It stands midway between dialogue and monologue, and perhaps indicates that the author is still experimenting in regard to the form. It is probably the first one of this book in the order of composition.

The argument is as follows : Learn from me, or rather from my authority, Ofellus—a plain but shrewd countryman—the value of simple living. Let us learn the lesson before we break our fast.

A man never despises frugal fare after heavy exercise, because the pleasure of eating lies, not in costly food, but in oneself. The most tempting dainties lose their flavour for the man who has no appetite. People foolishly prefer a peacock to a pullet, simply because it has a fine tail and costs more money. So, too, a three-pound mullet is admired, while a big pike is scorned. The former is an unnatural rarity, the latter is common, and the well-fed stomach scorns things common. Some day we shall find roast gulls in fashion (1-52).

SATIRES, II. II.

Plain living is not the same as mean living, and you must not avoid one fault merely to fall into another. There is a happy mean between stinginess and extravagance (53-69).

A simple fare means health of body, a good digestion, sound and refreshing sleep, mental vigour. It allows one to indulge himself occasionally, as when the holidays come, or in times of ill-health, or when old age arrives. In the good old days dainties were reserved for hospitality (70-93).

A luxurious life leads to disgrace and ruin. "That may be true of others," says one, "but I can well afford to be extravagant." Then why not use your money for better ends? And what about the changes and chances of life? Which of the two will meet them best, the man accustomed to every comfort, or the one who is content with little (94-111)?

I knew Ofellus in my boyhood, when he was the well-to-do owner of the land on which he now pays rent. In those days he lived the same simple life that he does now, and when misfortunes came, he faced them bravely and in true philosophic fashion (113-136).

Kiessling has pointed out how closely this Satire reproduces some ideas found in the well-known letter of Epicurus to Menoecus (Diog. Laert. x. 131), but Lejay has also called attention to striking parallels in Cicero's philosophical writings. Even the phrase tenuis victus (l. 53) is Ciceronian (cf. Tusc. Disp. iii. 49. 5; v. 26. 89, etc.). "Cicéron," says Lejay (p. 380), "est peut-être encore plus complètement l'inspiration des grandes lignes de la satire."

II.

Quae virtus et quanta, boni, sit vivere parvo (nec meus hic sermo est, sed quae praecepit Ofellus rusticus, abnormis<sup>1</sup> sapiens crassaque Minerva), discite, non inter lances mensasque nitentis,
 cum stupet insanis acies fulgoribus et cum 5
 acclinis falsis animus meliora recusat, verum hic impransi mecum disquirite. “ cur hoc ? ” dicam, si potero.

Male verum examinat omnis
 corruptus iudex. leporem sectatus equove lassus ab indomito vel, si Romana fatigat 10 militia adsuetum graecari, seu pila velox molliter austerum studio fallente laborem, seu te discus agit (pete cedentem aëra disco)—
 cum labor extuderit fastidia, siccus, inanis sperne cibum vilem ; nisi Hymettia mella Falerno 15
 ne biberis diluta. foris est promus et atrum
 defendens piscis hiemat mare : cum sale panis
 latrantem stomachum bene leniet. unde putas aut
 qui partum ? non in caro nidore voluptas

<sup>1</sup> abnormi aEK Acr. : ab normis Vollmer and Lejay.

<sup>a</sup> For Romana militia, or training for the Roman army, cf. Cicero, De nat. deor. ii. 64, “ ut exerceamur in venando ad similitudinem bellicae disciplinae,” and for the contrast with Greek games see Odes, iii. 24. 54 ff.

<sup>b</sup> According to Macrobius, Saturn. vii. 12, the best 136

SATIRE II

WHAT and how great, my friends, is the virtue of frugal living—now this is no talk of mine, but is the teaching of Ofellus, a peasant, a philosopher unschooled and of rough mother-wit—learn, I say, not amid the tables' shining dishes, when the eye is dazed by senseless splendour, and the mind, turning to vanities, rejects the better part; but here, before we dine, let us discuss the point together. "Why so?" I will tell you, if I can.

<sup>8</sup> Every judge who has been bribed weighs truth badly. After hunting the hare or wearily dismounting from an unbroken horse, or else, if Roman army-exercises<sup>a</sup> are fatiguing to one used to Greek ways, it may be the swift ball takes your fancy, where the excitement pleasantly beguiles the hard toil, or it may be the discus (by all means hurl the discus through the yielding air)—well, when toil has knocked the daintiness out of you; when you are thirsty and hungry, despise, if you can, plain food; refuse to drink any mead, unless the honey is from Hymettus, and the wine from Falernum.<sup>b</sup> The butler is out; the sea, dark and stormy, protects its fish; bread and salt will suffice to appease your growling belly. Whence or how do you think this comes about? The chiefest pleasure lies, not in the costly savour, but in mead was made of new Hymettian honey and old Falernian wine.

HORACE

summa, sed in te ipso est. tu pulmentaria quaere <sup>20</sup>
sudando : pinguem vitiis albumque neque ostrea
nec scarus aut poterit peregrina iuvare lagois.

Vix tamen eripiam, posito pavone velis quin
hoc potius quam gallina tergere palatum, corruptus vanis rerum, quia veneat auro <sup>25</sup>
rara avis et picta pandat spectacula cauda ;
tamquam ad rem attineat quicquam. num vesceris ista

quam laudas pluma ? cocto num adest honor<sup>1</sup> idem ?
carne tamen quamvis distat nil, hac<sup>2</sup> magis illam<sup>3</sup> imparibus formis deceptum te petere<sup>4</sup> ! esto : <sup>30</sup> unde datum sentis, lupus hic Tiberinus an alto
captus hiet, pontisne inter iactatus an amnis ostia sub Tusci ? laudas, insane, trilibrem mullum, in singula quem minuas pulmenta necesse est.

ducit te species, video. quo pertinet ergo <sup>35</sup>
proceros odisse lupos ? quia scilicet illis maiores natura modum dedit, his breve pondus.
ieiunus raro stomachus volgaria temnit.

“ Porrectum magno magnum spectare catino vellem,” ait Harpyiis gula digna rapacibus. at vos, <sup>40</sup> praesentes Austri, coquite horum obsonia. quamquam<sup>5</sup>

putet aper rhombusque recens, mala copia quando

<sup>1</sup> color Goth.

<sup>2</sup> haec.

<sup>3</sup> illam E Goth., Porph. : illa aD, II.

<sup>4</sup> petere aDEK Porph. : patet D<sup>2</sup>M, Orelli.

<sup>5</sup> quamvis, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cicero (Ad fam. ix. 20. 2) implies that a peacock was regarded as an essential feature of a banquet.

yourself. So earn your sauce with hard exercise. The man who is bloated and pale from excess will find no comfort in oysters or trout or foreign grouse.

<sup>23</sup> Yet, if a peacock be served,<sup>a</sup> I shall hardly root out your longing to tickle your palate with it rather than with a pullet. You are led astray by the vain appearance, because the rare bird costs gold and makes a brave show with the picture of its outspread tail—as though that had aught to do with the case! Do you eat the feathers you so admire? Does the bird look as fine when cooked? Yet, though in their meat they are on a par, to think that you crave the one rather than the other, duped by the difference in appearance! Very well. But what sense tells you whether this pike gasping here was caught in the Tiber or in the sea, whether in the eddies between the bridges<sup>b</sup> or just at the mouth of the Tuscan<sup>c</sup> river? You foolish fellow, you praise a three-pound mullet, which you must needs cut up into single portions. 'Tis the look, I see, that takes you. Why then detest a very long pike? It is, of course, because nature has made the pike large, and the mullet light of weight. Only a stomach that seldom feels hunger scorns things common.

<sup>30</sup> “But a big fish on a big dish outstretched! That's what I'd like to see!” cries a gullet worthy of the greedy Harpies. Nay, come in your might, ye southern gales, and taint these gluttons' dainties! And yet they are already rank, yon boar and great

<sup>b</sup> i.e. off the Insula Tiberina. The two bridges, Pons Cestius and Pons Fabricius, connected the island with the right and left banks of the Tiber.

<sup>c</sup> The Tiber rises in Etruria.

HORACE

ae-grum sollicitat stomachum, cum rapula plenus
 atque acidas mavolt inulas. necdum omnis abacta pauperies epulis regum : nam vilibus ovis 45
 nigrisque est oleis hodie locus. haud ita pridem Galloni praeconis erat acipensere mensa infamis. quid? tunc<sup>1</sup> rhombos minus aequor alebat<sup>2</sup>?
 tutus erat rhombus tutoque ciconia nido, donec vos auctor docuit praetorius. ergo 50
 si quis nunc mergos suavis edixerit assos, parebit pravi docilis Romana iuventus.

Sordidus a tenui victu distabit,<sup>3</sup> Ofello iudice ; nam frustra vitium vitaveris illud, si te alio pravum detorseris. Avidienus, 55
 cui Canis ex vero ductum<sup>4</sup> cognomen adhaeret, quinquennis oleas est et silvestria corna,
 ac nisi mutatum parcit defundere<sup>5</sup> vinum, et cuius odorem olei<sup>6</sup> nequeas perferre, licebit ille repotia, natalis aliosve dierum 60
 festos albatus celebret, cornu ipse bilibri
 caulibus instillat, veteris non parcus aceti.
 quali igitur victu sapiens utetur, et horum utrum imitabitur? hac urget lupo, hac canis, aiunt.<sup>7</sup> mundus erit, qua<sup>8</sup> non offendat sordibus, atque 65
 in neutram partem cultus miser. hic neque servis, Albuci senis exemplo, dum munia didit,<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> tum, II.

<sup>2</sup> aequora alebant EM.

<sup>3</sup> distabit early editors : distabat MSS.

<sup>4</sup> ductum V : dictum MSS.

<sup>5</sup> fundere, II.

<sup>6</sup> olet, II.

<sup>7</sup> angit D<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>8</sup> qui, II.

<sup>9</sup> dedit DEM.

<sup>a</sup> Lucilius had satirized Gallonius for serving a huge sturgeon at dinner.

<sup>b</sup> According to Porphyryon, the reference is to one Rufus, who set the fashion of eating storks, and who was defeated

turbot, since cloying plenty worries the jaded stomach, which, sated as it is, prefers radishes and tart pickles the while. Nor is the poor man's fare yet wholly banished from the feasts of kings, for cheap eggs and black olives still have a place. 'Tis not so long ago that by reason of a sturgeon the table of Gallonius the auctioneer won ill repute.<sup>a</sup> What? Was the sea less a home for turbot in those days? The turbot was safe, and safe was the nest of the stork, till a praetor's sanction taught you the lesson.<sup>b</sup> So now, should someone decree that roasted gulls are delicacies, our Roman youth, quick to learn ill ways, will obey.

<sup>53</sup> A mean style of living will differ, so Ofellus thinks, from a simple one; for it will be idle for you to shun one fault, if you turn aside into another crooked path. Avidienus, to whom the nickname "Dog" quite rightly clings, eats his olives five years old with cornels from the wood, and is chary of drawing his wine till it has soured; as to his oil, you couldn't bear its smell, yet even if in his whitened garb<sup>c</sup> he keeps a wedding or birthday feast or some other holiday, he drops it on the salad from a two-pound horn with his own hands, though his old vinegar he does not stint. What style then will the wise man adopt, and which of these two will he copy? On the one side, as the saying is, a wolf attacks, on the other a dog. He will be neat, so far as not to shock us by meanness, and in his mode of living will be unhappy in neither direction. He will neither, like old Albucius, be cruel to his slaves, as he assigns for the praetorship. The word praetorius is therefore used in irony.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. in holiday attire, and wearing a freshly cleaned toga.

HORACE

saevus erit ; nec sic ut simplex Naevius unctam convivis praebebit aquam : vitium hoc quoque magnum. 69

Accipe nunc, victus tenuis quae quantaque secum
adferat. imprimis valeas bene. nam variae res
ut noceant homini credas, memor illius escae, quae simplex olim tibi sederit : at simul assis
miscueris elixa, simul conchylia turdis, dulcia se in bilem vertent stomachoque tumultum 75
lenta feret pituita. vides ut pallidus omnis
cena desurgat dubia ? quin corpus onustum hesternis vitiis animum quoque praegravat una atque adfigit humo divinae particulam aerae.
alter, ubi dicto citius curata sopori 80
membra dedit, vegetus praescripta ad munia surgit.
hic tamen ad melius poterit transcurrere quondam,
sive diem festum rediens advexerit annus,
seu recreare volet tenuatum corpus, ubique
accedent anni,<sup>1</sup> tractari mollius aetas 85
imbecilla volet : tibi quidnam accedet ad istam quam puer et validus praesumis mollitiem, seu dura valetudo inciderit seu tarda senectus ?

Rancidum aprum antiqui laudabant, non quia nasus
illis nullus erat, sed, credo, hac mente, quod hospes
tardius adveniens vitiatum<sup>2</sup> commodius quam 91

<sup>1</sup> anni et Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> vitiaret VaEM.

---

<sup>a</sup> The phrase cena dubia (used by Terence, Phormio, 342) had become proverbial. It means a dinner so varied that you don't know what to take.

<sup>b</sup> Horace is using the language of high philosophy. The animus is a part of the universal divine spirit imprisoned in the body ; cf. Cicero, De senectute, 21. 78, "ex universa mente delibatos animos." In adfigit humo Horace echoes Plato, who, in Phaedo 83 D, says that every pleasure and their tasks, nor, like careless Naevius, will he offer greasy water to his guests: this too is a great blunder.

<sup>70</sup> Now learn what and how great are the blessings that simple living brings in its train. First of all, good health. For how harmful to a man a variety of dishes is, you may realize, if you recall that plain fare which agreed with you in other days. But as soon as you mix boiled and roast, shell-fish and thrushes, the sweet will turn to bile, and the thick phlegm will cause intestine feud. Do you see how pale rises each guest from his "puzzle feast" <sup>a</sup>? Nay more, clogged with yesterday's excess, the body drags down with itself the mind as well, and fastens to earth a fragment of the divine spirit.<sup>b</sup> The other, when after refreshment he has surrendered his limbs to sleep sooner than you can speak,<sup>c</sup> rises up in vigour for his appointed tasks. Yet at times he will be able to pass over to better cheer, whether the revolving year brings some holiday, or he wants to renew a shrunken frame, and when, as time advances, the frailty of age looks for more indulgent treatment. But as for you, if ill-health come, or enfeebling age, what will you bring to add to that indulgence which, while young and hale, you thus forestall?

<sup>89</sup> Our fathers used to praise a boar when high; not that they had no noses, but with this thought, I suppose, that a guest arriving behind time could more conveniently eat it when tainted than the every pain is a sort of nail, which nails (προσηλοῖ) the soul to the body.

<sup>c</sup> The proverbial expression dicto citius, "quicker than a word," is like the English "before you can say Jack Robinson." The phrase curare membra or curare corpus is often used of taking refreshment.

HORACE

integrum edax dominus consumeret. hos utinam inter heroas natum tellus me prima tulisset !

Das aliquid famae, quae carmine gratior aurem
occupet<sup>1</sup> humanam : grandes rhombi patinaeque 95
grande ferunt una cum damno dedecus ; adde iratum patrum, vicinos, te tibi iniquum et frustra mortis cupidum, cum derit egenti
as, laquei pretium. " iure," inquit, " Trausius istis iurgatur verbis : ego vectigalia magna 100
divitiasque habeo tribus amplas regibus." ergo quod superat non est melius quo insumere possis ?
cur eget indignus quisquam, te divite ? quare templa ruunt antiqua deum ? cur, improbe, carae non aliquid patriae tanto emetiris acervo ? 105
uni nimirum recte<sup>2</sup> tibi semper erunt res,
o magnus posthac inimicis risus ! uterne ad casus dubios fidet sibi certius ? hic qui pluribus adsuerit mentem corpusque superbum,
an qui contentus parvo metuensque futuri 110
in pace, ut sapiens, aptarit idonea bello ?

Quo magis his credas, puer<sup>3</sup> hunc ego parvus Ofellum
integris opibus novi non latius usum quam nunc accisis. videas metato<sup>4</sup> in agello cum pecore et gnatis fortem mercede colonum, 115

<sup>1</sup> occupat, II.

<sup>2</sup> rectae V.

<sup>3</sup> puer λ Goth. : puerum, I.

<sup>4</sup> metatum, II.

<sup>a</sup> Horace says that their ancestors kept the boar till it was " high," a practice which he attributes to their hospitality, or desire to have something in store should a guest arrive.

<sup>b</sup> In Latin literature the uncle is the regular type of the stern and severe relative.

<sup>c</sup> This jest, found in Plautus, e.g. Pseud. 88, doubtless comes from Attic comedy.

<sup>d</sup> The word means "measured off," i.e. for confiscation.

greedy master, while still fresh. Oh, that the early world had given me birth among heroes such as those ! <sup>a</sup>

<sup>94</sup> You set some store by good repute, which, sweeter than song, charms the human ear. Big turbots and dishes bring a big scandal and loss. Add the angry uncle,<sup>b</sup> the angry neighbours, your hatred of self, your vain longing for death, when in your need you lack a penny to buy a halter with.<sup>c</sup> " 'Tis all right," he answers, " for Trausius to be scolded in such language, but I have large revenues, and riches ample for three kings." Well, is there no better object on which you can spend your surplus ? Why is any worthy man in want, while you are rich ? Why are the ancient temples of the gods in ruin ? Why, shameless man, do you not measure out something from that great heap for your dear country ? You alone, of course, will always find things go well. Oh, what a laughing-stock you will be some day for your friends ! Which of the two, in face of changes and chances, will have more self-confidence—he who has accustomed a pampered mind and body to superfluities, or he who, content with little and fearful of the future, has in peace, like a wise man, provided for the needs of war ?

<sup>112</sup> That you may give more credit to such words, I will tell you how, when I was a little boy, this Ofellus, as I well know, used his full means on no larger scale than he does now, when they are cut down. You may see him on his little farm, now assigned to others,<sup>d</sup> with his cattle and his sons, a

It was assigned to the veteran Umbrenus (ii. 133). Probably Ofellus was dispossessed of his farm when Horace, like Virgil, lost his own property, in 41 B.C.

HORACE

" non ego," narrantem, " temere edi luce profesta
 quicquam praeter holus fumosae cum pede pernae.
 ac mihi seu longum post tempus venerat hospes,
 sive operum vacuo gratus conviva per imbrem vicinus, bene erat non piscibus urbe petitis, 120
 sed pullo atque haedo ; tum<sup>1</sup> pensilis uva secundas et nux ornabat mensas cum duplice ficu.
 post hoc ludus erat culpa<sup>2</sup> potare magistra, ac venerata Ceres, ita culmo surgeret alto, explicuit vino contractae seria frontis. 11 125
 saeviat atque novos moveat Fortuna tumultus :
 quantum<sup>3</sup> hinc imminuet ? quanto aut ego parcius aut vos,
 o pueri, nitiuistis,<sup>4</sup> ut huc novus incola venit ?
 nam propriae telluris erum natura neque illum
 nec me nec quemquam statuit : nos expulit ille ; 130
 illum aut nequities aut vafri inscitia iuris, postremum expellet certe vivacior heres.<sup>5</sup>
 nunc ager Umbreni sub nomine, nuper Ofelli dictus, erit nulli proprius, sed cedit in usum nunc mihi, nunc alii.<sup>6</sup> quocirca vivite fortes, 135 fortiaque adversis opponite pectora rebus."

<sup>1</sup> tunc, I : tum, II, Priscian.

<sup>2</sup> culpa mss., Porph. : cupa Bentley, who also suggested nulla : captu . . . magistro Housman.

<sup>3</sup> quantum DM, II : Peerlkamp conjectured quando.

<sup>4</sup> instituistis D<sup>2</sup> $\phi$  $\lambda$ .

<sup>5</sup> From here D is wanting up to ii. 3. 75.

<sup>6</sup> aliis  $\lambda$ .

<sup>a</sup> Instead of the formalities of a banquet, where a magister bibendi prescribed the rules, any shirking would be punished by a forfeit.

<sup>b</sup> Usus is probably put for ususfructus, which was the right

sturdy tenant-farmer, and this is his story : " I was not the man to eat on a working day, without good reason, anything more than greens and the shank of a smoked ham, and if after long absence a friend came to see me, or if in rainy weather, when I could not work, a neighbour paid me a visit—a welcome guest—we fared well, not with fish sent for from town, but with a pullet or a kid ; by and by raisins and nuts and split figs set off our dessert. Then we had a game of drinking, with a forfeit to rule the feast,<sup>a</sup> and Ceres, to whom we made our prayer—" so might she rise on lofty stalk !"—smoothed out with wine the worries of a wrinkled brow. Let Fortune storm and stir fresh turmoils ; how much will she take off from this ? How much less sleek have I been, or you, my lads, since this new landlord came ? Nature, in truth, makes neither him nor me nor anyone else lord of the soil as his own. He drove us out, and he will be driven out by villainy, or by ignorance of the quirks of the law, or in the last resort by an heir of longer life. To-day the land bears the name of Umbrenus ; of late it had that of Ofellus ; to no one will it belong for good, but for use it will pass, now to me and now to another.<sup>b</sup> Live, then, as brave men, and with brave hearts confront the strokes of fate."

of using and enjoying property, but not of owning it. The latter was called dominium. For the thought cf. the famous verse in Lucretius (iii. 971), " Life is granted to none in fee-simple, to all on lease," vitæque mancipio nulli datur, omnibus usu.

III

THE FOLLIES OF MANKIND

ACCORDING to the Stoics, everyone save the wise man is mad; πᾶς ἄφρων μαίνεται. Horace makes this paradox his text and assails the follies of the world.

The Satire takes the form of a dialogue between the poet and Damasippus. Horace is at his newly acquired Sabine farm, to which he has retired to avoid the excitement of the Saturnalia in Rome. Damasippus, of whom we hear in Cicero's Epistles, is a bankrupt speculator and dealer in works of art, who, having fallen into the depths of despair, had been rescued by the Stoic sage Stertinius, was converted by him to philosophy, and so made into the wise man he has now become. He reports a long discourse of Stertinius upon the text, "all men, save only the wise, are mad" (1-81).

The sermon of Stertinius may be divided into four parts, dealing with avarice (82-157), ambition (158-223), self-indulgence (225-280), and superstition (281-295), all of which are phases of madness.

The avaricious are the largest class of madmen. They believe poverty to be the greatest possible disgrace, and suppose that wealth can confer every blessing (91-97). Avarice, as well as its opposite, prodigality, are illustrated by the story of the two sons of Servius Oppidius (168-178).

HORACE

The ambitious are mad. Agamemnon, slaying his daughter for the sake of power and position, was just as mad as Ajax, who slew sheep under the delusion that they were his enemies (193-213).

The madness of self-indulgence is illustrated by the spendthrift Nomentanus, who wastes the fortune he has inherited (224-238); by the son of Aesopus, who swallows the precious pearl of his mistress which he has dissolved in vinegar (239-241); by the sons of Arrius, who breakfast on costly nightingales (243-246); and especially by the follies of lovers, who are often as crazy as would be a grown-up man if he indulged in the sports of children (247-254). Better for them to follow the example of Polemon, who listened to the voice of reason and cast away the tokens of his malady (254-257). The love passion may even lead to bloodshed, as we saw the other day when Marius murdered his mistress and took his own life (275-280).

The madness of superstition is illustrated by the old freedman who prayed for immortality, and by the mother whose sick son recovers only to be killed through her foolish vow (281-295).

"And what," asks Horace, as Damasippus brings this long sermon of Stertinius to a close, "is my madness? I think I am sane."

DAMASIPPUS. So Agave thought, when she was carrying in her hands the head of her unfortunate son.

HORACE. Well, what is my madness?

DAM. You are aping the great, like the frog in the fable. You write verses, you have a bad temper,

SATIRES, II. III.

you live beyond your means, you are always falling in love.

HOR. You greater madman, spare the lesser! (296-326).

This is not only the longest, but also the best constructed of Horace's Satires. Notwithstanding the long discourse which makes up the main body of the poem, the dialogue-form serves as a framework for the whole, and allows the poet to employ a light, humorous vein in both beginning and end, where he turns the laugh against himself. Note that while the writer's main aim throughout is to portray striking forms of human folly, a second one is to ridicule the airs and manners of the Stoic preachers of the day. The Satire was probably written in 33 B.C., because in l. 185 there is a reference to the curule aedileship of Agrippa, held in that year and distinguished by magnificence of display.

III.

" Sic<sup>1</sup> raro scribis,<sup>2</sup> ut toto non quater anno membranam poscas, scriptorum quaeque retexens, iratus tibi, quod vini somnique benignus
 nil dignum sermone canas ; quid fiet ? at<sup>3</sup> ipsis Saturnalibus huc fugisti. sobrius ergo<sup>4</sup> 5
 dic aliquid dignum promissis : incipe. nil est :
 culpantur frustra calami, immeritusque laborat
 iratis natus paries dis atque poetis.
 atqui voltus erat multa et praeclara minantis,
 si vacuum tepido cepisset villula tecto. 10
 quorsum pertinuit stipare Platona Menandro, Eupolin, Archilochum, comites educere tantos ?
 invidiam placare paras virtute relicta ?
 contemnere, miser. vitanda est improba Siren desidia, aut quidquid vita meliore parasti 15
 ponendum aequo animo." di te, Damasippe, deaeque

<sup>1</sup> sic : si E.

<sup>2</sup> scribis M : scribes aE. Bentley read si scribes.

<sup>3</sup> at V, II : ab, I. <sup>4</sup> Bentley punctuated after sobrius.

<sup>a</sup> Parchment would be needed for the final form of his words, after the poet had written and corrected his notes on the tablets.

<sup>b</sup> Horace is probably thinking of Penelope's web.

<sup>c</sup> The wall suffers because the poet pounds it in his vain efforts at composition.

<sup>d</sup> Though Orelli supposed that Plato the philosopher is here meant, it seems certain that Horace is speaking of Plato the poet, leader of the so-called Middle Attic Comedy.

SATIRE III

DAMASIPPUS. So seldom do you write, that not four times in all the year do you call for the parchment,<sup>a</sup> while you unweave the web of all you have written,<sup>b</sup> and are angry with yourself because, while so generous of wine and of sleep, you turn out no poetry worth talking about. What will be the end? Why, you say, even in the Saturnalia you fled here for refuge. Well then, in your sober mood, tell something worthy of your promises. Begin. Nothing comes. In vain you blame the pen; and the innocent wall, begotten when gods and poets were angry, must suffer.<sup>c</sup> Yet you had the look of one who threatened great and glorious things, if once you were care-free and your country cottage welcomed you under its warm roof. What was the use of packing Plato<sup>d</sup> with Menander, and of taking out of town Eupolis and Archilochus, such weighty comrades? Think you to lay Envy low by deserting Virtue? You will earn contempt, poor wretch. You must shun the wicked Siren, Sloth, or be content to drop whatever honour you have gained in nobler hours.

HORACE. May the gods and goddesses give you, Thus he would take with him to the country representatives of Old (Eupolis), Middle, and New (Menander) Comedy, as well as the great iambic poet, Archilochus.

HORACE

verum ob consilium donent tonsore. sed unde tam bene me nosti ?

“ Postquam omnis res mea Ianum
ad medium fracta est, aliena negotia curo, excussus propriis. olim nam quaerere amabam, 20
quo vafer<sup>1</sup> ille pedes lavisset Sisyphus aere, quid sculptum infabre, quid fustum durius esset ;
callidus huic signo ponebam milia centum ;
hortos egregiasque domos mercarier unus
cum lucro noram ; unde frequentia Mercuriale 25
imposuere mihi cognomen compita.” novi, et miror morbi purgatum te illius. “ atqui
emovit veterem mire novus, ut solet, in cor traiecto lateris miseri capitisve<sup>2</sup> dolore, ut lethargicus hic cum fit pugil et medicum urget.” 30
dum ne quid simile huic, esto ut libet. “ o bone, ne te frustrare, insanis et tu stultique prope omnes, si quid Stertinius veri<sup>3</sup> crepat, unde ego mira descripsi docilis praecepta haec, tempore quo me solatus iussit sapientem pascere barbam 35
atque a Fabricio non tristem ponte reverti.

<sup>1</sup> vafer, I, Porph.: faber, II.

<sup>2</sup> -ve] -que a, II.

<sup>3</sup> verum, II.

<sup>a</sup> Being a philosopher, Damasippus grows a long beard.
See l. 35 below.

<sup>b</sup> The temple of Janus stood on the north side of the Forum, at the entrance to the street called Argiletum. This street, centre of the banking business of Rome, is here called “Janus” after the temple, and was probably lined with a colonnade or arcade. Horace elsewhere uses the expression Ianus summus ab imo (Epist. i. 1. 54).

<sup>c</sup> He was a connoisseur in antiques and objets d'art.

Damasippus, for your sound advice — a barber<sup>a</sup> !
But how come you to know me so well ?

DAM. Ever since the wreck of all my fortunes at the Central Arcade,<sup>b</sup> I have looked after other people's business, after being flung overboard from my own. There was a time when my hobby<sup>c</sup> was to look out for the bronze in which shrewd old Sisyphus had washed his feet, and to see what work of art was crude in the carving, what was too rough in the casting. As an expert, I valued this or that statue at a hundred thousand. As to gardens and fine houses, I was the one man that knew how to buy them at a bargain ; hence the crowded streets gave me the nickname of " Mercury's pet."<sup>d</sup>

HOR. I know it, and am surprised to find you cured of that disorder.

DAM. Nay, what is surprising is that a new disorder drove out the old, as is the way when the pain of aching side or head passes into the stomach, or when the lethargic patient here turns boxer and pummels the doctor.

HOR. As long as you do nothing of that sort, be it as you please.

DAM. My good sir, don't deceive yourself ; you, too, are mad, and so, I may say, are all fools, if there is any truth in the preaching of Stertinus, from whom I took down these lessons that I learned, the very day that he consoled me, and bade me grow a wise man's beard, and go home from the Fabrician bridge,<sup>e</sup> no longer sad. For after my

<sup>a</sup> Mercury was the god of gain ; cf. l. 68.

<sup>b</sup> This bridge, between the island in the Tiber, and the old Campus Martius, still stands. The inscription on it says that it was built by L. Fabricius, curator viarum.

HORACE

nam male re gesta cum vellem mittere operto me capite in fluimen, dexter stetit et :

‘ Cave faxis

te quicquam indignum : pudor,’ inquit, ‘ te malus angit,<sup>1</sup>

insanos qui inter vereare insanus haberi. 40
primum nam inquiram, quid sit furere : hoc si erit<sup>2</sup> in te solo, nil verbi, pereas quin fortiter, addam.

‘ Quem mala stultitia et quemcumque inscitia veri
caecum agit, insanum Chrysippi porticus et grex 44
autumat. haec populos, haec magnos formula reges, excepto sapiente, tenet.

‘ Nunc accipe, quare

desipiant omnes aequae ac tu, qui tibi nomen insano posuere. velut silvis, ubi passim palantis error certo de tramite pellit, ille sinistrorsum, hic dextrorsum abit, unus utrique<sup>3</sup> 50 error, sed variis illudit partibus ; hoc te crede modo insanum, nihilo ut sapientior ille, qui te deridet, caudam trahat.<sup>4</sup>

‘ Est genus unum

stultitiae nihilum metuenda timentis, ut ignis, ut rupes fluviosque in campo obstare queratur : 55
alterum et huic varum et nihilo sapientius ignis per medios fluviosque ruentis. clamat amica mater,<sup>5</sup> honesta soror cum cognatis, pater, uxor :
“ hic fossa est ingens, hic rupes maxima : serva ! ”

<sup>1</sup> angit 4 Bland. : urget, II.

<sup>2</sup> si erit] siet, II.

<sup>3</sup> utrisque EM, a not legible.

<sup>4</sup> trahit.

<sup>5</sup> amica mater joined by Porph. Some editors separate them.

<sup>a</sup> The discourse of Stertinius extends from here, l. 38, to l. 295.

business failed, and I wanted to cover up my head and fling myself into the river, he stood at my right hand and said <sup>a</sup> :

“Beware of doing anything unworthy of yourself. 'Tis a false shame that tortures you, for among madmen you fear to be thought mad. For first of all I will ask, What is madness? If this is found in you alone, I will not add another word to save you from dying bravely.

“Every man whom perverse folly, whom ignorance of the truth drives on in blindness, the Porch <sup>b</sup> of Chrysippus and his flock pronounce insane. This definition takes in whole nations, this takes in mighty kings, all save only the sage.

<sup>46</sup> “Now learn why all, who have given you the name of madman, are quite as crazy as yourself. Just as in a forest, where some error drives men to wander to and fro from the proper path, and this one goes off to the left and that one to the right : both are under the same error, but are led astray in different ways : so believe yourself to be insane only so far that he who laughs at you drags a tail behind him, no whit the wiser man.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>53</sup> “One class of fools fear where there is nothing at all to fear, crying out that fires, that rocks and rivers stop their course over an open plain. Another class, diverging from this, but no whit more wisely, would rush through the midst of fire and flood. Though a fond mother, a noble sister, father, wife and kindred, cry out : ‘Here’s a broad ditch, here’s a huge rock,

<sup>b</sup> The term Stoic is derived from the στοά (= porticus) in Athens, where Zeno and his successors taught.

<sup>c</sup> A reference to the trick played by children of tying a tail to people without their knowing it.

HORACE

non magis audierit quam Fufius ebrius olim, 60
cum Ilionam edormit, Catienis mille ducentis
"mater, te appello!" clamantibus. huic ego volgus<sup>1</sup> errori similem cunctum insanire docebo.

'Insanit veteres statuas Damasippus emendo :
integer est mentis Damasippi creditor? esto. 65
"accipe quod numquam reddas mihi," si tibi dicam, tunc insanus eris si acceperis? an magis excors
reiecta praeda, quam praesens Mercurius fert?
scribe decem a Nerio<sup>2</sup>: non est satis; adde Cicutae nodosi tabulas centum, mille adde catenas: 70
effugiet tamen haec<sup>3</sup> sceleratus vincula Proteus.
cum rapies in ius<sup>4</sup> malis ridentem alienis,
fiet aper, modo avis, modo saxum et, cum volet, arbor.
si male rem gerere insani est, contra bene sani, putidius multo cerebrum est, mihi crede, Perelli 75
dictantis, quod tu numquam rescribere possis.

'Audire atque togam iubeo componere, quisquis
ambitione mala aut argenti pallet amore, quisquis luxuria tristive superstitione

<sup>1</sup> vulgum a: vultum φψ.

<sup>2</sup> hic E.

<sup>2</sup> Anerio known to scholiasts.

<sup>4</sup> in iura a, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> Fufius played the part of the sleeping heroine in the Ilione of Pacuvius, but when the ghost of her murdered son (a part taken by Catienus) called upon her, he was so sound asleep that he did not hear, though the audience, taking up the actor's words, joined in the appeal.

<sup>b</sup> These words are addressed to the creditor, who is shown to be more foolish than the borrower, for whatever notes or bonds are involved in the transaction, they prove to be worthless in the end. With decem understand tabulas, Nerius being, like Cicutae and Perellius, a money-lender. They are all supposed to be uncommonly shrewd. Many

look out ! ' they would no more give ear than once did drunken Fufius,<sup>a</sup> as he over-slept the part of Ilione, while twelve hundred Catieni shouted, ' Mother, on thee I call ! ' Like such folly is the madness of all the world, as I shall prove.

<sup>64</sup> " Damasippus is mad in buying old statues ; the creditor of Damasippus, is he sound of mind ? Be it so ! But if I say to you, ' Take this sum which you need never return to me, ' will you be a madman if you take it ? Or will you be more senseless if you spurn the booty which propitious Mercury offers ? ' Write out ten bonds drawn up by Nerius. ' <sup>b</sup> That's not enough ; add a hundred of the cunning Cicuta—add a thousand fetters ! yet your scoundrelly Proteus will slip out from all these ties. When you drag him to court, he will laugh at your expense ; <sup>c</sup> he will turn into a boar, then into a bird, then into a stone, or, if he likes, a tree. If it be the mark of a madman to manage an estate badly, but of a sane man to manage well, then much more addled, believe me, is the brain of a Perellius, who dictates the bond, which you can never pay.

<sup>77</sup> " Now arrange your robes, <sup>d</sup> give heed, I bid you, and whoever of you is pale with sordid ambition or avarice, whoever is feverish with extravagance or prefer to supply sestertia with decem, taking Nerius to be a banker who pays out money on an order from the creditor.

<sup>e</sup> Horace's phrase malis ridentem alienis, " laugh with alien jaws," is an echo of Homer's γναθμοῖσι γελοίων ἀλλοτρίοισιν (Od. xx. 347), which, however, referred to forced, unnatural laughter.

<sup>d</sup> Stertinus now assumes that he is addressing a class, and therefore bids his hearers prepare for a formal discourse, such as Stoic teachers frequently delivered.

HORACE

aut alio mentis morbo calet : huc propius me, 80
dum doceo insanire omnis vos ordine, adite.

‘ Danda est ellebori multo pars maxima avaris ;
nescio an Anticyram ratio illis destinet omnem.
heredes Staberi summam incidere sepulcro,
ni sic fecissent, gladiatorum dare centum 85
damnati populo paria atque epulum arbitrio Arri, frumenti quantum metit Africa. “ sive ego prave seu recte hoc volui, ne sis patruus mihi : ” credo, hoc Staberi prudentem animum vidisse. “ quid ergo sensit, cum summam patrimoni insculpere saxo 90
heredes voluit ? ” quoad vixit, credidit ingens pauperiem vitium et cavit nihil acrius, ut, si forte minus locuples uno quadrante perisset,<sup>1</sup>
ipse videretur sibi nequior. omnis enim res, virtus, fama, decus, divina humanaque pulchris 95
divitiis parent ; quas qui construxerit,<sup>2</sup> ille clarus erit, fortis, iustus. “ sapiensne<sup>3</sup> ? ” etiam, et rex et quidquid volet.<sup>4</sup> hoc, veluti virtute paratum, speravit magnae laudi fore.

‘ Quid simile isti

Graecus Aristippus, qui servos proicere aurum 100
in media iussit Libya, quia tardius irent
propter onus segnes ? uter est insanior horum ?

<sup>1</sup> periret, I, adopted by Palmer.

<sup>2</sup> contraxerit, II, 3 Bland.

<sup>3</sup> -ne] -que DEM.

<sup>4</sup> velut in, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> The ancient specific for insanity ; cf. Ars Poetica, 300. For Anticyra see Index.

<sup>b</sup> This unusual number would be exhibited at the funeral feast. Q. Arrius entertained many thousands of people at the extravagant funeral feast which he gave in honour of his father.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 2. 97. Staberius means that his heirs are not to criticize him for what may seem to them an idiotic will.

160

gloomy superstition, or some other mental disorder. Hither, come nearer to me, while I prove that you are mad, all of you from first to last.

<sup>82</sup> "To the covetous must we give far the largest dose of hellebore :<sup>a</sup> wisdom, I rather think, would assign to them all Anticyra. The heirs of Staberius had to engrave upon his tomb the sum of his estate : should they fail to do so, they were bound to provide for the people a hundred pairs of gladiators,<sup>b</sup> with such a feast as Arrius would direct, and as much corn as Africa reaps. 'Whether I am right or wrong in willing this,' he wrote, 'don't play the uncle<sup>c</sup> with me.' That, I take it, is what Staberius in his wisdom foresaw. 'Well,' you ask, 'what was his intent when he willed that his heirs should carve on stone the sum of his estate ?' All his life long he thought poverty a monstrous evil, and shunned nothing more earnestly, so that, if haply he had died less rich by a single penny, so far would he have thought himself the worse man. For all things—worth, repute, honour, things divine and human—are slaves to the beauty of wealth, and he who has made his 'pile' will be famous, brave and just. 'And wise too ?' Yes, wise, and a king and anything else he pleases.<sup>d</sup> His riches, as though won by worth, would bring him, he hoped, great renown.

<sup>99</sup> "What is the likeness between such a man and the Greek Aristippus, who in mid Libya bade his slaves throw away his gold, because, said he, freighted with the burden, they journeyed too slowly ? Which of the two is the madder ? Useless is an instance which

Hoc in l. 89 refers to this censorious attitude, not to the substance of ll. 94 f., as Keightley, Wickham and Lejay hold.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 3. 124 and note.

HORACE

nil agit exemplum, litem quod lite resolvit.
 si quis emat citharas, emptas comportet in unum,
 nec studio citharae nec Musae deditus ulli, 105
 si scalpra et formas non sutor, nautica vela aversus mercaturis, delirus et amens undique dicatur merito. qui<sup>1</sup> discrepat istis,<sup>2</sup>
 qui nummos aurumque recondit, nescius uti compositis metuensque velut contingere sacrum ? 110 ‘ Si quis ad ingentem frumenti semper acervum porrectus<sup>3</sup> vigilet cum longo fuste, neque illinc audeat esuriens dominus contingere granum,
 ac potius foliis parvus vescatur<sup>4</sup> amaris ;
 si positis intus Chii veterisque Falerni 115
 mille cadis—nihil est, tercentum milibus—acre
 potet acetum ; age, si et stramentis incubet, undeoctoginta annos natus, cui stragula vestis, blattarum ac tinearum epulae, putrescat in arca ;
 nimirum insanus paucis videatur, eo quod 120
 maxima pars hominum morbo iactatur eodem.
 filius aut etiam haec libertus ut ebibat heres,
 dis inimice senex, custodis ? ne tibi desit ?
 quantulum enim summae curtabit quisque dierum,
 unguere si caulis oleo meliore caputque 125
 coeperis impexa foedum porrigine ? quare, si quidvis satis est, periuras, surripis, aufers
 undique ? tun<sup>5</sup> sanus !

‘ Populum si caedere saxis
 incipias servosve tuos,<sup>6</sup> quos aere pararis,

<sup>1</sup> quid DE.

<sup>2</sup> iste, II.

<sup>3</sup> proiectus.

<sup>4</sup> vexatur aE : pascatur M.

<sup>5</sup> tunc D : tu insanus M, II.

<sup>6</sup> tuo Goth.

---

<sup>o</sup> For l. 122 cf. Od. ii. 14. 25 :

absumet heres Caecuba dignior
 servata centum clavibus, etc.

solves puzzle by puzzle. If a man were to buy harps, and soon as bought were to pile them together, though feeling no interest in the harp or any Muse; if, though no cobbler, he did the same with shoe-knives and lasts; with ships' sails, though set against a trader's life—everyone would call him crazy and mad, and rightly too. How differs from these the man who hoards up silver and gold, though he knows not how to use his store, and fears to touch it as though hallowed?

<sup>111</sup> "If beside a huge corn-heap a man were to lie outstretched, keeping ceaseless watch with a big cudgel, yet never dare, hungry though he be and the owner of it all, to touch one grain thereof, but rather feed like a miser on bitter herbs; if, with a thousand jars—that's nothing, say three hundred thousand—of Chian and old Falernian stored in his cellars, he were to drink sharp vinegar; nay if, when but a year short of eighty, he should lie on bed of straw, though rich coverlets, prey of moths and worms, lay mouldering in his chest; few, doubtless, would think him mad, because the mass of men toss about in the same kind of fever. Is it that a son or even a freedman heir may drink it up that you, you god-forsaken dotard, are guarding it?<sup>a</sup> Is it that you fear want? Why, how tiny a sum will each day dock off, if you begin with better oil to dress your salad, as well as your head, foul with uncombed scurf? Why, if anything is enough for you, do you perjure, steal, plunder on every side? You sane!

<sup>128</sup> "If you were to take to pelting stones at the crowd, or at your own slaves, for whom you've paid

HORACE

insanum te omnes pueri clamentque puellae : 130
cum laqueo uxorem interemis matremque veneno, incolumi capite es ? quid enim ? neque tu hoc facis

Argis,

nec ferro ut demens genetricem occidis Orestes.
an tu reris eum occisa insanisse parente,
ac non ante malis dementem actum Furiis quam 135
in matris iugulo ferrum tepefecit acutum ?
quin ex quo est habitus male tutae mentis Orestes
nil sane fecit, quod tu reprehendere possis :
non Pyladen ferro violare aususve sororem Electran, tantum maledicit utrique vocando 140
hanc Furiam, hunc aliud, iussit quod splendida bilis.

‘ Pauper Opimius<sup>1</sup> argenti positi intus et auri,
qui Veientanum festis potare diebus Campana solitus trulla vappamque profestis, quondam lethargo grandi est oppressus, ut heres 145
iam circum loculos et clavis laetus ovansque curreret. hunc medicus multum celer atque fidelis excitat hoc pacto : mensam poni iubet atque effundi saccos nummorum, accedere pluris ad numerandum. hominem sic erigit, addit et illud : 150

“ ni tua custodis, avidus iam haec auferet heres.”
“ men vivo ? ” “ ut vivas igitur, vigila. hoc age.”
“ quid<sup>2</sup> vis ? ”

“ deficient<sup>3</sup> inopem venae te, ni cibus atque
ingens accedit<sup>4</sup> stomacho fultura ruenti.

<sup>1</sup> Opimius Porph. : opimus, II.

<sup>2</sup> quod D., II.

<sup>3</sup> deficient E.

<sup>4</sup> accedat DL.

<sup>a</sup> The argument is ironical. Such an incident as this matricide might savour of high tragedy, but, of course, in the tragedy of Orestes both the place and the manner of killing were different. As a matter of fact, these differences are quite unessential.

in cash, all would hoot at you as mad, lads and lasses alike. When you strangle your wife and poison your mother, are you sound in head? Why not? You're not doing this at Argos, nor killing a mother with a sword, as mad Orestes did.<sup>a</sup> Or do you suppose he went mad after killing his parent, and was not spurned to frenzy by the wicked Furies before he warmed his sharp steel in his mother's throat? Nay, from the moment that Orestes was held to be of unsafe mind, he did nothing whatever that you can condemn. He did not dare to attack with the sword Pylades or his sister Electra. He merely threw ill words at both, calling her a Fury, and him by some other name which his gleaming choler prompted.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>142</sup> "Opimius, a poor man for all his gold and silver hoarded up within, would on holidays, from ladle of Campanian ware,<sup>c</sup> drink wine of Veii, and on working days soured wine. Now once he fell into a lethargy so deep that already his heir was running in joy and triumph round about his keys and coffers. But his physician, a man of very quick wit and a loyal friend, revives him by this device. He has a table brought in and bags of coin poured out, and bids many draw near to count it. Thus he brings the man to, and adds, 'Unless you guard your wealth, your greedy heir will be off with it forthwith.' 'What, while I'm alive?' 'Well, if you mean to live, wake up. Come now!' 'What would you have me do?' 'You are weak, and your veins will fail you, unless food and strong support be given your sinking stomach. Do

<sup>b</sup> The expression here used belongs to medical language. Black bile, which the ancients supposed to be a cause of madness (cf. μελαγχολία), has a glittering appearance.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Campana supellex (Sat. i. 6. 118).

HORACE

tu cessas ? agedum, sume hoc tisanarium oryzae." 155
 " quanti empta<sup>1</sup> ? " " parvo. " " quanti ergo ? "
 " octussibus. " " eheu !

quid refert, morbo an furtis pereamque rapinis ? "
 " " Quisnam igitur sanus ? " qui non stultus.
 " quid avarus ? "

stultus et insanus. " quid, si quis non sit avarus, continuo sanus ? " minime. " cur, Stoice ? " dicam. 160
 non est cardiacus (Craterum dixisse putato)
 hic aeger : recte est igitur surgetque ? negabit, quod latus aut renes morbo temptentur<sup>2</sup> acuto.
 non est periurus neque sordidus : immolet aequis
 hic porcum Laribus : verum ambitiosus et audax : 165
 naviget Anticyram. quid enim differt, barathrone dones quidquid habes an numquam utare paratis ?

' Servius Oppidius Canusi duo praedia, dives antiquo censu, gnatis divisisse duobus fertur et hoc<sup>3</sup> moriens pueris dixisse vocatis 170
 ad lectum : " postquam te talos, Aule, nucesque
 ferre sinu laxo, donare et ludere vidi, te, Tiberi, numerare, cavis abscondere tristem,
 extimui ne vos ageret vesania<sup>4</sup> discors,
 tu Nomentanum, tu ne sequerere Cicutam. 175
 quare per divos oratus uterque Penatis, tu cave ne minuas, tu ne maius facias id quod satis esse putat pater et natura coercet.
 praeterea, ne vos titillet gloria, iure
 iurando obstringam ambo : uter aedilis fueritve 180

<sup>1</sup> empti, II.

<sup>2</sup> temptantur Priscian.

<sup>3</sup> haec.

<sup>4</sup> insania, I, adopted by Orelli and Palmer.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. ll. 82, 83, above.

you hold back? Come now, take this drop of rice-gruel.' 'What's the cost?' 'Oh, a trifle.' 'How much, I say?' 'Eight pence.' 'Alack! what matters it, whether I die by sickness, or by theft and robbery?'

<sup>158</sup> " 'Who, then, is sane?' He who is no fool. 'What of the covetous?' He is fool and madman. 'Well, if a man is not covetous, is he then and there sane?' By no means. 'Why, good Stoic?' I will tell you. 'This patient,' suppose Craterus to have said, 'is no dyspeptic.' He is well then and may get up? 'No,' he will say, 'for his lungs or his kidneys are afflicted with acute disease.' Here's one who is no perjurer or miser. Let him slay a hog to the kind Lares. But he is ambitious and headstrong. Let him take ship for Anticyra.<sup>a</sup> For what is the difference, whether you throw all you have into a pit, or never make use of your savings?

<sup>168</sup> "There's a story that Servius Oppidius, a rich man, as incomes once were, divided his two farms at Canusium between his two sons, and on his death-bed called them to him and said: 'Ever since I saw you, Aulus, carrying your taws and nuts in a loose toga, giving and gambling them away—and you, Tiberius, anxiously counting them and hiding them in holes, I have greatly feared that madness of different kinds might plague you—that you, my son, might follow after Nomentanus, and you after Cicuta. I therefore adjure you both, by our household gods, the one not to reduce, the other not to increase, what your father thinks enough, and what nature sets as a limit. Further, that ambition may not tickle your fancy, I shall bind you both by an oath: whichever of you becomes aedile or praetor, vestrum praetor. is intestabilis ēt sàcèr esto.

HORACE

in cicere atque faba bona tu perdasque lupinis, latus ut in circo spatiere aut<sup>1</sup> aeneus ut stes,<sup>1</sup>
nudus agris. nudus nummis, insane, paternis ?
scilicet ut plausus. quos fert Agrippa, feras tu, 185
astuta ingenuum volpes imitāta leōnem."—

"Ne quis humasse velit Aiace[m], Atrida, vetas cur ?"

"Rex sum."

"Nil ultra quaero<sup>2</sup> plebeius."

"Et aequam
rem imperito : at<sup>3</sup> si cui videor non iustus, inulto dicere quod<sup>4</sup> sentit permitto."

"Maxime regum, 190
di tibi dent capta classem<sup>5</sup> reducere<sup>6</sup> Troia.
ergo consulere et mox respondere licebit ?"

"Consule."

"Cur Ajax. heros ab Achille secundus, putescit, totiens servatis clarus Achivis ?
gaudeat ut populus Priami Priamusque inhumato, 195
per quem tot iuvenes patrio caruere sepulcro ?"

"Mille ovium insanus morti dedit, inclitum Ulixen et Menelaum una mecum se occidere clamans."

"Tu cum pro vitula statuis dulcem Aulide gnatam ante aras spargisque mola caput, improbe, salsa, 200 rectum animi servas cursum<sup>7</sup> ? insanus quid enim Ajax

<sup>1</sup> et, II.      <sup>2</sup> quaere V, Bentley.      <sup>3</sup> at V: ac MSS.

<sup>4</sup> quae D.      <sup>5</sup> classem capta E.      <sup>6</sup> deducere.

<sup>7</sup> cursum Bothe: quorsum MSS. and retained by Orelli, Kiessling, Wickham, Morris, etc.: quorum Goth., Porph.

---

<sup>a</sup> These would be given to the people by way of largess
by aediles and praetors. Such an expense might be serious enough for people of small fortunes.

<sup>b</sup> The dialogue which begins here and continues to l. 207

let him be outlawed and accursed. Would you waste your wealth on vetches, beans, and lupines,<sup>a</sup> that you may play the swell and strut in the Circus, or be set up in bronze, though stripped of the lands, stripped, madman, of the money your father left : to the end, oh yes, that you may win the applause which Agrippa wins—a cunning fox mimicking the noble lion ?’

<sup>187</sup> “ Son of Atreus,<sup>b</sup> you forbid us to think of burying Ajax. Why is this ?

“ ‘ I am king.’

“ I, a common man, ask no more.

“ ‘ And my command is fair, but if anyone deems me unjust, I permit him to say freely what he thinks.’

“ Mightiest of kings, may the gods grant you to take Troy and bring your fleet safe home ! May I then ask questions and answer in turn ?

“ ‘ Pray, do.’

“ Why does Ajax, a hero second only to Achilles, lie rotting, though so often he won glory by saving the Greeks ? Is it that Priam and Priam’s people may exult in that man’s lacking burial, through whom so many of their sons were bereft of burial in their native land ?

“ ‘ The madman slew a thousand sheep, crying that he was slaying famed Ulysses, Menelaus, and myself.’

“ And you, when at Aulis you brought your sweet child to the altar in a heifer’s stead, and sprinkled her head with salt meal, O shameless one, did you keep your mind in its sound course ? Why, what did the madman Ajax do, when he slew the flock is between the Stoic Stertinius and Agamemnon, and is suggested by the scene at the end of the Ajax of Sophocles, where Menelaus forbids Teucer to bury his brother Ajax.

HORACE

fecit cum stravit ferro pecus ? abstinuit vim uxore et gnato : mala multa precatus Atridis non ille aut Teucrum aut ipsum violavit Ulixen."

" Verum ego, ut haerentis adverso litore navis 205 eriperem, prudens placavi sanguine divos."

" Nempe tuo, furiose."

" Meo, sed non furiosus."—

' Qui species alias veris scelerisque<sup>1</sup> tumultu
permixtas capiet, commotus habebitur, atque stultitiane erret, nihilum distabit, an ira. 210

Ajax immeritos cum<sup>2</sup> occidit desipit agnos :
cum prudens scelus ob titulos admittis inanis,
stas animo et purum est vitio tibi, cum tumidum est,
cor ?

si quis lectica nitidam gestare amet agnam, 214
huic vestem, ut gnatae, paret ancillas, paret aurum, Rufam aut<sup>3</sup> Posillam<sup>4</sup> appellet fortique marito
destinet uxorem, interdicto huic omne adimat ius praetor et ad sanos abeat tutela propinquos.
quid ? si quis gnatam pro muta devovet agna,
integer est animi ? ne dixeris. ergo ubi prava 220
stultitia, hic summa est insania ; qui sceleratus,
et furiosus erit ; quem cepit vitrea fama,
hunc circumtonuit gaudens Bellona cruentis.

' Nunc age, luxuriam et Nomentanum arripe mecum :

<sup>1</sup> mss. have veri sceleris or veris celeris ( V ) : ( veris sceleris Goth. ).

<sup>2</sup> cum immeritos D, II.

<sup>3</sup> et V.

<sup>4</sup> posillam V : pusillam mss.

<sup>a</sup> Adverso litore : the shore refused to let the ships depart.

<sup>b</sup> The species ( = φαντασίας ) are ideas or mental concepts, which may be true or false, and become confused when some guilty impulse causes disturbance. At l. 208 Stertinius still addresses Agamemnon, but gradually slides into a continuation of his lecture.

<sup>c</sup> Like Agamemnon.

<sup>d</sup> Like Ajax.

with the sword? He withheld violence from wife and child. His curses on the Atridae were copious, but no harm did he do either to Teucer or even to Ulysses.

“‘But I, in order to free the ships that clung to a hostile <sup>a</sup> shore, purposely appeased the gods with blood.’

“Yes, with your own, maniac.

“‘My own blood; but no maniac I.’

<sup>208</sup> “He who conceives ideas that are other than true, and confused by the turmoil due to sin,<sup>b</sup> will be held distraught and, whether he go astray from folly <sup>c</sup> or from rage,<sup>d</sup> it will not matter. Ajax, when he slays harmless lambs, is insane. When you purposely commit a crime for empty glory, are you sound of mind, and is your heart, when swollen with pride, free from fault? Suppose one chose to carry about in a litter a pretty lamb, and, treating it as a daughter, provided it with clothes, maids, gold, called it ‘Goldie’ or ‘Teenie,’ and planned to have it wed a gallant husband: the praetor by injunction would take from him all control, and the care of him would pass to his sane relations. Well, if a man offers up his daughter, as if she were a dumb lamb, is he sound of mind? Say not so. Thus, where there is perverse folly, there is the height of madness. The man who is criminal, will also be a maniac; he who is caught by the glitter of fame has about his head the thunder of Bellona, who delights in bloodshed.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>224</sup> “Now, come, arraign with me extravagance and Nomentanus; for Reason will prove that spend-

<sup>e</sup> Bellona’s votaries were fanatics, who gashed their bodies with knives.

vincet<sup>1</sup> enim stultos ratio insanire nepotes. 225
 hic simul accepit patrimoni mille talenta, edicit, piscator uti, pomarius, auceps,
 unguentarius ac Tusci turba impia vici,
 cum scurris fator, cum Velabro omne macellum mane domum veniant. quid tum? venere fre-quentes. 230

verba facit leno: "quidquid mihi, quidquid et horum cuique domi est, id crede tuum et vel nunc pete vel cras."

accipe quid contra haec iuvenis responderit aequus:
 "tu<sup>2</sup> nive Lucana dormis ocreatus, ut aprum cenem ego; tu piscis hiberno ex aequare verris.<sup>3</sup> 235 segnis ego, indignus qui tantum possideam: aufer!
 sume tibi deciens; tibi tantundem; tibi triplex,
 unde uxor media currit de nocte vocata.<sup>4</sup>"

'Filius Aesopi detractam ex aure Metellae, scilicet ut deciens solidum absorberet,<sup>5</sup> aceto 240
 diluit insignem bacam: qui sanior ac si
 illud idem in rapidum flumen iaceretve cloacam?
 Quinti progenies Arri, par nobile fratrum,
 nequitia et nugis, pravorum et amore gemellum, lusciniis soliti impenso prandere coemptas, 245
 quorsum abeant? sani ut<sup>6</sup> creta, an carbone notati?

'Aedificare casas, plostello adiungere mures, ludere par impar, equitare in harundine longa,
 si quem delectet<sup>7</sup> barbatum, amentia verset.
 si<sup>8</sup> puerilius his ratio esse evincet amare, 250

<sup>1</sup> vincit, II.      <sup>2</sup> tu Bentley for in of mss.

<sup>3</sup> vellis, I, Acron.

<sup>4</sup> citata Porph., who knows also vocata.

<sup>5</sup> obsorberet a: exsorberet, II.

<sup>6</sup> sani ut] sani or sanii, II.      <sup>7</sup> delectat, II.      <sup>8</sup> sic E.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 2. 51.

thrifths are fools and madmen. This man, soon as he received his patrimony of a thousand talents, decreed, in praetor-fashion,<sup>a</sup> that fishmonger, fruit-seller, fowler, perfumer, the Tuscan Street's vile throng, cooks and parasites, the whole market and Velabrum, should come to him next morning. What next? They came in crowds. A pimp was spokesman. 'Whatever I have, whatever any of these have at home, believe me, is at your service. Send for it to-day or to-morrow.' Hear the honest youth's reply: 'Amid Lucanian snows you sleep well-booted, that I may have a boar for dinner. You sweep the stormy seas for fish. I am lazy and unworthy to possess so much. Away with it. You take a million—you, the same—and you, from whose house your wife comes running when called at midnight, thrice that sum.'

<sup>239</sup> "The son of Aesopus took from Metella's ear a wondrous pearl, and meaning, forsooth, to swallow a million at a gulp, steeped it in vinegar.<sup>b</sup> How was he more sane than if he had flung that same thing into a running river or a sewer? The sons of Quintus Arrius, a famous pair of brothers, twins in wickedness, folly, and perverted fancies, used to breakfast on nightingales, bought up at vast cost. Into which list are they to go? Marked with chalk as sane, or with charcoal?<sup>c</sup>

<sup>247</sup> "Building toy-houses, harnessing mice to a wee cart, playing odd and even, riding a long stick—if these things delighted a bearded man, lunacy would plague him. If reason prove that being in love is

<sup>b</sup> The same absurd story is told of Cleopatra. See Pliny, N.H. ix. 58. 117.

<sup>c</sup> White was associated with good fortune, black with ill-luck.

HORACE

nec quicquam differre, utrumne in pulvere, trimus<sup>1</sup>
 quale prius, ludas opus, an meretricis amore sollicitus plores : quaero, faciasne quod olim mutatus Polemon ? ponas insignia morbi, fasciolas, cubital,<sup>2</sup> focalia, potus ut ille 255
 dicitur ex collo furtim carpsisse coronas, postquam est impransi correptus voce magistri ?
 porrigis irato puero cum poma, recusat :
 "sume, catelle !" negat ; si non des, optet. amator
 exclusus qui distat, agit ubi secum, eat an non, 260 quo rediturus erat non arcessitus, et haeret invisus foribus ? " nec nunc, cum me<sup>3</sup> vocet<sup>4</sup> ultro, accedam ? an potius mediter finire dolores ?
 exclusit ; revocat : redeam ? non, si obsecret." ecce servus non paulo sapientior : " o ere, quae res 265
 nec modum habet neque consilium, ratione modoque
 tractari non volt. in amore haec sunt mala, bellum, pax rursum : haec si quis tempestatis prope ritu
 mobilia et caeca fluitantia sorte labore reddere certa sibi, nihilo plus explicet ac si 270
 insanire paret certa ratione modoque."
 quid ? cum Picenis excerpens semina pomis gaudes, si cameram percusti forte, penes te es ?
 quid ? cum balba feris annoso verba palato,

<sup>1</sup> primus V.

<sup>2</sup> cubital Porph. V : cubitale Mss.

<sup>3</sup> ne Goth.

<sup>4</sup> vocat.

<sup>a</sup> Only effeminate men would wear these things.

<sup>b</sup> This was Xenocrates, whose lecture on temperance converted the young profligate to a sober, philosophic life, so that he afterwards succeeded his master as head of the Academy.

<sup>c</sup> Horace here reproduces, almost literally, a scene from the Eunuchus (46-63) of Terence, where Phaedria debates with Parmeno, his slave, whether he is to go back to Thais.

more childish than such ways, that it makes no difference whether you play at building in the sand, as you did when three years old, or whine in anxiety for love of a mistress, I ask you, will you do as once Polemon did, when converted? Will you lay aside the tokens of your malady, garters, elbow-cushion, neck-wrap,<sup>a</sup> even as he, 'tis said, stealthily plucked the chaplets from his neck after a carouse, the moment he was arrested by the voice of his fasting master? <sup>b</sup> When you offer apples to a sulky child, he refuses them. 'Take them, pet.' He says, 'No.' Were you not to offer them, he would crave them. How differs the lover who, when shut out, debates with himself whether to go or not to where, though not invited, he meant to return, and hangs about the hated doors? <sup>c</sup> 'Shall I not go even now, when she invites me of her own accord? Or rather, shall I think of putting an end to my affliction? She shut me out. She calls me back. Shall I return? No—not if she implores me.' Now listen to the slave, wiser by far of the two: 'My master, a thing that admits of neither method nor sense cannot be handled by rule and method. In love inhere these evils—first war, then peace: things almost as fickle as the weather, shifting about by blind chance, and if one were to try to reduce them to fixed rule for himself, he would no more set them right than if he aimed at going mad by fixed rule and method.' Why, when you pick the pips from Picenian apples,<sup>d</sup> and are glad if by chance you have hit the vaulted roof, are you master of yourself? Why, when on your old palate <sup>d</sup> If a lover could hit the ceiling with an apple-seed, shot from between his thumb and finger, he supposed his love was returned.

HORACE

aedificante casas qui sanior ? adde cruorem 275 stultitiae, atque ignem gladio scrutare. modo, inquam,

Hellade percussa Marius cum praecipitat se
cerritus fuit ; an commotae crimine mentis absolves hominem et sceleris damnabis eundem,
ex more imponens cognata vocabula rebus ? 280

‘ Libertinus erat, qui circum compita siccus
lautis mane senex manibus currebat et, “ unum,” (“ quid tam magnum ? ” addens) “ unum me surpitem morti,

dis etenim facile est ! ” orabat ; sanus utrisque
auribus atque oculis : mentem, nisi litigiosus, 285
exciperet dominus, cum venderet. hoc quoque volgu<sup>1</sup> Chrysippus ponit fecunda in gente Meneni.

“ Iuppiter, ingentis qui das adimisque dolores,”
mater ait pueri mensis iam quinque cubantis, “ frigida si puerum quartana reliquerit, illo 290
mane<sup>2</sup> die, quo tu indicis ieiunia, nudus
in Tiberi stabit.” casus medicusve<sup>3</sup> levarit aegrum ex praecipiti, mater delira necabit
in gelida fixum ripa febremque reducet.

quone malo mentem concussa ? timore deorum.’ 295

Haec mihi Stertinius, sapientum octavus, amico

<sup>1</sup> vulgo, II.      <sup>2</sup> magne aD : magno E.      <sup>3</sup> -que, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> Horace gives his own turn to the Pythagorean rule, πῦρ μαχαίρα μὴ σκαλεῖν, which probably means, “excite not an angry man to violence.”

<sup>b</sup> See Index under Hellas.

<sup>c</sup> According to the Stoics, crime and madness were identical (see l. 221). The different names given to them (e.g. insania and scelus) were thus synonyms.

<sup>d</sup> He would follow the ritual of fasting and ceremonial washing, and pray at the shrines of the Lares of the crossways, the Lares Compitales.

you strike out baby-talk, how are you wiser than the child that builds toy-houses? Add blood to folly, and stir the fire with a sword.<sup>a</sup> The other day, for instance, when Marius killed Hellas and then flung himself headlong, was he crazy?<sup>b</sup> Or will you acquit the man of a disordered mind and condemn him for crime, giving to things, as we often do, names of kindred meaning?<sup>c</sup>

<sup>281</sup> "A freedman there was who in old age, fasting and with washed hands, would in early hours run to all street-shrines and pray:<sup>d</sup> 'Save me, me alone ('Is it not a little boon?' he would add), save me alone from death. 'Tis an easy matter for the gods.' The man was sound in both ears and eyes; but as to his mind, his master, if selling him, would not have vouched for that, unless bent on a lawsuit. All this crowd<sup>e</sup> also Chrysippus will place in the prolific family of Menenius. 'O Jupiter, who givest and takest away sore afflictions,' cries the mother of a child that for five long months has been ill abed, 'if the quartan chills leave my child, then on the morning of the day on which thou appointest a fast,' he shall stand naked in the Tiber.' Should chance or the doctor raise the sick lad up from his peril, his crazy mother will kill him by planting him on the cold bank and bringing back his fever. What is the malady that has stricken her mind? Fear of the gods.'"

<sup>286</sup> Such were the weapons which my friend Stertinus, eighth of the wise men, put in my hands, that

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the superstitious who are also insane, like Menenius, of whom, however, nothing is known.

<sup>b</sup> This would be dies Iovis, corresponding to our Thursday (Thor's day). The Jews, whose practices are here referred to, fasted on this day.

HORACE

arma dedit, posthac ne compellarer inultus.
dixerit insanum qui me, totidem audiet atque
respicere ignoto discet pendentia tergo."

Stoice, post damnum sic vendas omnia pluris, 300
qua me stultitia, quoniam non est genus unum, insanire putas? ego nam videor mihi sanus.

"Quid? caput abscisum manibus cum portat<sup>1</sup>

Agave

gnati infelicis, sibi tunc<sup>2</sup> furiosa videtur?"

Stultum me fateor (liceat concedere veris) 305
atque etiam insanum: tantum hoc edissere, quo me
aegrotare putes animi vitio.

"Accipe. primum

aedificas, hoc est, longos imitaris, ab imo
ad summum totus moduli bipedalis, et idem corpore maiorem rides Turbonis in armis 310
spiritum et incessum: qui ridiculus minus illo?
an quodcumque facit Maecenas, te quoque verum est
tantum dissimilem et tanto<sup>3</sup> certare minorem?

Absentis ranae pullis vituli pede pressis,
unus ubi effugit, matri denarrat, ut ingens 315
belua cognatos eliserit: illa rogare, quantane? num tantum,<sup>4</sup> sufflans se, magna fuisset?

<sup>1</sup> abscisum manibus cum portat Goth.: manibus portavit
V: demens cum portat Mss. Bentley restored manibus to
text.

<sup>2</sup> tum, II.

<sup>3</sup> tantum V: tanto Mss.

<sup>4</sup> tantum VE Porph.: tandem aD<sup>2</sup>M, omitted in D<sup>1</sup>.

---

<sup>a</sup> A reference to the fable of the two wallets. We see only the one in front which holds our neighbours' faults. But cf. l. 53 below.

<sup>b</sup> In the Bacchae of Euripides, Agave appears with the head of her son Pentheus, whom she and the other frenzied Maenads have torn to pieces.

no one thereafter might call me names with impunity. Whoso dubs me madman shall hear as much in reply, and shall learn to look behind on what is hanging from his back, that is never noticed.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>300</sup> HORACE. Good Stoic—as I pray that after your losses you may sell all you have at a profit!—in what folly, since there are so many kinds, do you think my madness appears? For to myself I seem sane.

DAMASIPPUS. What? When Agave is carrying in her hands the head of her luckless son,<sup>b</sup> which she has cut off, does she even then think herself mad?

HOR. I confess my folly—let me yield to the truth—and my madness too. This only unfold: from what mental failing do you think I suffer?

DAM. Listen. First, you are building,<sup>c</sup> which means, you try to ape big men, though from top to toe your full height is but two feet;<sup>d</sup> and yet you laugh at the strut and spirit of Turbo in his armour, as though they were too much for his body. How are you less foolish than he? Is it right that whatever Maecenas does, you also should do, so unlike him as you are and such a poor match for him?

<sup>314</sup> A mother frog<sup>e</sup> was away from home when her young brood were crushed under the foot of a calf. One only escaped to tell the tale to his mother, how a huge beast had dashed his brothers to death. “How big was it?” she asks; “as big as this?” puffing herself out. “Half as big again.” “Was it big like this?” as she swelled herself out more and more.

<sup>c</sup> Probably on his Sabine farm.

<sup>d</sup> For Horace’s short stature see Epist. i. 20. 24, corporis exigui.

<sup>e</sup> Horace reproduces, with variations, the well-known Aesopian fable of the Ox and the Frogs.

HORACE

‘ maior dimidio.’ ‘ num tanto<sup>1</sup> ? ’ cum magis atque se magis inflaret, ‘ non, si te ruperis,’ inquit, ‘ par eris.’ haec a te non multum abludit imago. 320
 adde poemata nunc, hoc est, oleum adde camino quae si quis sanus fecit, sanus facis et<sup>2</sup> tu.
 non dico<sup>3</sup> horrendam rabiem,”

Iam desine !

“ Cultum

maiorem censu,”

Teneas, Damasippe, tuis te !

“ Mille puellarum, puerorum mille furores.” 325

O maior tandem parcas, insane, minori !

<sup>1</sup> tanto MSS. : tantum.

<sup>2</sup> facis et] facies D, 3 Bland.

<sup>3</sup> dicam D.

SATIRES, II. III. 318-326

"Though you burst yourself," said he, "you'll never be as large." Not badly does this picture hit you off. Now throw in your verses—that is, throw oil on the fire. If any man ever wrote verses when sane, then you are sane in writing yours. I say nothing of your awful temper—

HOR. Stop now !

DAM. Your style beyond your means—

HOR. Mind your own business, Damasippus.

DAM. Your thousand passions for lads and lasses.

HOR. O greater one, spare, I pray, the lesser madman !

IV

THE ART OF GOOD LIVING

"Where is the man that can live without dining?"

In the Rome of the Augustan Age cookery seems to have held the place it had occupied in Greece in the degenerate days of the Middle and New Attic Comedy, when, as Mahaffy says,<sup>a</sup> "it was no mere trade, but a natural gift, a special art, a school of higher philosophy." This false importance given to the subject is gently satirized by Horace, who represents himself as meeting one Catius, just as the latter is hurrying home to arrange his notes upon a wonderful lecture on gastronomy, which he has just heard, and of which Horace induces him to repeat the main points. Horace professes profound admiration for so much learning, and begs his friend to take him to hear the lecturer himself, who must be what Epicurus was to Lucretius, the fountain-head of wisdom in regard to right living.

There has been much speculation, both as to who Catius was or represents and as to the main purport of this Satire. Among the Saturae of Ennius there was one with the formidable title Heduphagetica, which dealt with gastronomical matters and was based on the Ἠδυνάθεια of Archestratus of Gela. It is clear from his fragments that Lucilius handled the same topic, and we find among the titles of Varro's Menippean Satires that of Περὶ ἐδεσμάτων. It is probable therefore that Horace is simply trying his hand upon a traditional satiric theme.

<sup>a</sup> Social Life in Greece, p. 299.

HORACE

But it is possible that the Satire has a greater significance than this. In the preceding Satire Horace deals in his own humorous fashion with the Stoics; in this he seems to be playing with the Epicureans. In the concluding verses the reference to Lucretius is unmistakable, while scattered through the Satire are philosophical terms, such as natura (7, 21, 45, 64), praecepta (11), ratio (36), and ingenium (47), which are conspicuous in Lucretius's great poem. Palmer can see no reference to Epicureanism here, because Horace was himself an Epicurean, but Horace was never firmly wedded to any school. He was a free lance,

nullius addictus iurare in verba magistri (Epist. i. 1. 14),

and even if he was an orthodox Epicurean, what was there to prevent his satirizing those of the school whose idea of the vita beata was to have good things to eat and drink? Even Metrodorus, intimate friend of Epicurus, is reported to have said that "it is our business, not to seek crowns by saving the Greeks, but to enjoy ourselves in good eating and drinking" (Plutarch, Adv. Col. 1125 D).

As to Catius, the scholiasts tell us that he was an Epicurean and (like Lucretius) the author of a De rerum natura, but in commenting on l. 47 they also refer to another Catius who had written a book on the baker's art. There is a Catius, an Insubrian and an

184

SATIRES, II. iv.

Epicurean, spoken of by Cicero as lately dead (Ad fam. xv. 16; cf. Quintilian, x. 1. 124), and it is highly probable that for this dramatic purpose Horace here introduces a person of an earlier generation in much the same way in which he uses Trebatius in the first, and Damasippus in the third, Satires of this book.

IV.

Unde et quo Catius ?

“ Non est mihi tempus aventi
ponere signa novis praeceptis, qualia vincent<sup>1</sup> Pythagoran Anytique reum doctumque Platona.”

Peccatum fateor, cum te sic tempore laevo interpellarim<sup>2</sup> ; sed des veniam bonus, oro. 5
quod si interciderit tibi nunc aliquid, repetes mox,
sive est naturae hoc sive artis, mirus utroque.

“ Quin id erat curae, quo pacto cuncta tenerem, utpote res tenuis, tenui sermone peractas.”

Ede hominis nomen, simul et, Romanus an hospes. 10

“ Ipsa<sup>3</sup> memor praecepta canam, celabitur<sup>4</sup> auctor.

Longa quibus facies ovis erit, illa memento,
ut suci melioris et ut magis alba rotundis,
ponere ; namque marem cohibent callosa vitellum.
caule suburbano qui siccis crevit in agris 15
dulcior ; irriguo nihil est elutius horto.

Si vespertinus subito te oppresserit hospes,

<sup>1</sup> vincent V, II : vincunt, I : vincant.

<sup>2</sup> interpellarem.

<sup>3</sup> ipse D.

<sup>4</sup> celebrabitur, II.

<sup>a</sup> Socrates.

<sup>b</sup> The word canam suggests that the rules that follow are to be treated like an oracle. They may be grouped roughly under four heads : (a) the antepast, or gustatio (12-34) ; (b) the main dinner, or mensa prima (35-69) ; (c) the dessert, or mensa secunda (70-75) ; (d) details of service (76-87).

SATIRE IV

HORACE. Whence and whither, Catius ?

CATIUS. I have no time to stop, so keen am I to make a record of some new rules, such as will surpass Pythagoras, and the sage <sup>a</sup> whom Anytus accused, and the learned Plato.

HOR. I confess my fault in thus breaking in on you at an awkward moment, but kindly pardon me, I pray. If aught has slipped from you now, you will soon recover it ; whether your memory is due to nature or to art, in either case you are a marvel.

CAT. Nay, I was just thinking how to keep all in mind, for it was a subtle theme handled in subtle style.

HOR. Tell me the man's name, whether he is a Roman or a stranger.

<sup>11</sup> CAT. The rules themselves I will recite <sup>b</sup> from memory ; the professor's name must be withheld.

Give good heed to serve eggs of an oblong shape, for they have a better flavour and are whiter than the round ; they are firm and enclose a male yoke. Cabbage grown on dry lands is sweeter than from farms <sup>c</sup> near the city ; nothing is more tasteless than a watered garden's produce.

If a friend suddenly drops in upon you of an <sup>a</sup> These would be irrigated artificially.

HORACE

ne gallina malum responset<sup>1</sup> dura palato, doctus eris vivam mixto<sup>2</sup> mersare Falerno ;
hoc teneram faciet.

Pratensibus optima fungis      20
natura est ; aliis male creditur.

Ille salubris
aestates peraget,<sup>3</sup> qui nigris prandia moris finiet, ante gravem quae legerit arbore solem.

Aufidius forti miscebat mella Falerno, mendose ; quoniam vacuis committere venis      25
nil nisi lene decet ; leni praecordia mulso
prolueris melius. si dura morabitur alvus, mitulus et viles pellent obstantia conchae
et lapathi brevis herba, sed albo non sine Co.

Lubrica nascentes implent conchyliæ lunæ ;      30
sed non omne mare est generosae fertile testæ :
murice Baiano melior Lucrina peloris, ostrea Circeiis, Miseno oriuntur echini, pectinibus patulis iactat se molle Tarentum.

Nec sibi cenarum quivis temere arroget artem,      35
non prius exacta tenui ratione saporum.
nec satis est cara piscis averrere<sup>4</sup> mensa
ignarum quibus est ius aptius et quibus assis languidus in cubitum iam se conviva reponet.<sup>5</sup>

Umber et iligna nutritus glande rotundas      40
curvat aper lances carnem vitantis<sup>6</sup> inertem ;
nam Laurens malus est, ulvis et harundine pinguis.

<sup>1</sup> respondet DEM : responsat a.

<sup>2</sup> mixto mss. : musto Bentley, widely adopted.

<sup>3</sup> peragit, I.

<sup>4</sup> avertere DM.

<sup>5</sup> reponit, II.

<sup>6</sup> vitiantis.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e., to continue eating. This is more probable than, as taken by Palmer, "which ones being broiled, the guest, after eating his fill of them, shall at length replace himself on his elbow."

evening, and you fear that a tough fowl may answer ill to his taste, you will be wise to plunge it alive into diluted Falernian : this will make it tender.

Mushrooms from the meadows are best ; others are not to be trusted.

A man will pass his summers in health, who will finish his luncheon with black mulberries which he has picked from the tree before the sun is trying.

Aufidius used to mix his honey with strong Falernian—unwisely ; for when the veins are empty one should admit nothing to them that is not mild. With mild mead you will do better to flood the stomach. If the bowels be costive, limpet and common shell-fish will dispel the trouble, or low-growing sorrel—but not without white Coan wine.

New moons swell the slippery shell-fish, but it is not every sea that yields the choicest kind. The Lucrine mussel is better than the Baian cockle. Oysters come from Circeii, sea-urchins from Misenum, luxurious Tarentum plumes herself on her broad scallops.

<sup>35</sup> It is not everyone that may lightly claim skill in the dining art, without first mastering the subtle theory of flavours. Nor is it enough to sweep up fish from the expensive stall, not knowing which are better with sauce, and which, if broiled, will tempt the tired guest to raise himself once more upon his elbow.<sup>a</sup>

From Umbria, fed on holm-oak acorns, comes the boar that makes the round dish bend, when the host would shun tasteless meat ; for the Laurentian is a poor beast, being fattened on sedge and reeds.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Macaulay, " Battle of Lake Regillus " :

From the Laurentian jungle,
The wild hog's reedy home.

HORACE

Vinea submittit capreas non semper edulis.
 fecundae<sup>1</sup> leporis sapiens sectabitur armos.
 piscibus atque avibus<sup>2</sup> quae natura et foret aetas, 45
 ante meum nulli patuit quaesita palatum.

Sunt quorum ingenium nova tantum<sup>3</sup> crustula
 promit.

nequaquam satis in re una consumere curam ;
 ut si quis solum hoc, mala ne sint vina, laboret,
 quali perfundat<sup>4</sup> piscis securus olivo. - 50

Massica si caelo suppones vina sereno, nocturna, si quid crassi est, tenuabitur aura,
 et decedet odor nervis inimicus ; at illa
 integrum perdunt lino vitata saporem.

Surrentina vafer qui miscet faece Falerna 55
 vina,<sup>5</sup> columbino limum bene colligit ovo,
 quatenus ima petit volvens aliena vitellus.

Tostis marcentem squillis recreabis et Afra potorem coclea ; nam lactuca innatat acri post vinum stomacho ; perna magis et<sup>6</sup> magis hillis 60
 flagitat immorsus refici, quin omnia malit quaecumque immundis fervent allata popinis.

Est operae pretium duplicis pernoscere iuris naturam. simplex e dulci constat olivo, quod pingui miscere mero muriaque decebit 65
 non alia quam qua<sup>7</sup> Byzantia putuit orca.

<sup>1</sup> fecundae V: fecundi MSS.

<sup>2</sup> atque pavis. <sup>3</sup> tamen, II.

<sup>4</sup> profundat. <sup>5</sup> vinum.

<sup>6</sup> ac EM. <sup>7</sup> quae aD, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> The ius duplex, or compound sauce, consists of (1) the simplex, viz. sweet olive oil, and (2) the other ingredients named in ll. 65 ff. The passage, however, is not clear. Some prefer to take ius duplex as meaning two kinds of sauce, one of which, the simplex, described in ll. 64-66,

Roes bred in a vineyard are not always eatable. The connoisseur will crave the wings of a hare when in young. As to fish and fowl, what their qualities and age should be is a question never made clear to any palate before mine.

Some there are whose talent lies only in finding new sweets ; 'tis by no means enough to spend all one's care on a single point—just as if someone were anxious only that his wines be good, but cared not what oil he poured upon his fish.

If you set Massic wine beneath a cloudless sky, all its coarseness will be toned down by the night air, and the scent, unfriendly to the nerves, will pass off ; but the same wine, when strained through linen, is spoiled, losing its full flavour. Surrentine wine a knowing man mixes with lees of Falernian, and carefully collects the sediment with pigeons' eggs, for the yolk sinks to the bottom, carrying with it all foreign matter.

A jaded drinker you will rouse afresh by fried prawns and African snails ; for after wine lettuce rises on the acid stomach. By ham and by sausages rather does it crave to be pricked and freshened. Nay, it would prefer any viands brought smoking hot from untidy cookshops.

It is worth while to study well the nature of the compound sauce.<sup>a</sup> The simple consists of sweet olive oil, which should be mixed with thick wine and with brine, such as that of which your Byzantine jar consists of oil, wine, and brine, while the compound adds to these the chopped herbs, saffron, and Venafran oil of ll. 67-69.

HORACE

hoc ubi confusum sectis inferbuit herbis Corycioque croco sparsum stetit, insuper addes<sup>1</sup>
pressa Venafranae quod baca remisit olivae.

Picenis cedunt pomis Tiburtia suco ; 70 nam facie praestant. Venucula convenit ollis ;
rectius Albanam fumo duraveris uvam.
hanc ego cum malis, ego faecem primus et allec,
primus et invenior<sup>2</sup> piper album cum sale nigro incretum puris circumposuisse catillis. 75
immane est vitium dare milia terna macello angustoque vagos piscis urgere catino.
magna movet<sup>3</sup> stomacho fastidia, seu puer unctis tractavit calicem manibus, dum furta ligurrit, sive gravis veteri craterae<sup>4</sup> limus adhaesit. 80
vilibus in scopis, in mappis, in scobe quantus consistit sumptus ? neglectis, flagitium ingens.
ten lapides varios lutulenta<sup>5</sup> radere palma
et Tyrias dare circum illuta toralia vestis, oblitum, quanto curam sumptumque minorem 85
haec habeant, tanto reprehendi iustius illis, quae nisi divitibus nequeunt<sup>6</sup> contingere mensis ! ”

Docte Cati, per amicitiam divosque rogatus, ducere me auditum, perges quocumque, memento.
nam quamvis memori referas mihi pectore cuncta, 90
non tamen interpret tantundem iuveris. adde
vultum habitumque hominis, quem tu vidisse beatus

<sup>1</sup> addens, II.

<sup>2</sup> inveni aM : inventor E.

<sup>3</sup> movent, I.

<sup>4</sup> creterrae Vφψ.

<sup>5</sup> luculenta, φψl.

<sup>6</sup> nequeant Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> Byzantium was an important centre for the fishing industry of the Black Sea, and the brine in which the fish were sent was held in high esteem.

smells so strong.<sup>a</sup> When this, mixed with chopped herbs, has been boiled, and, after being sprinkled with Corycian saffron, has been left to stand, you are to add besides some of the juice yielded by the pressed berry of the Venafran olive.

Apples from Tibur yield to the Picenian in flavour, but in look are finer. The Venuculan grape suits the preserving jar; the Alban you had better dry in the smoke. This last you will find that I was the first to serve round the board with apples, as I was the first to serve up wine-lees and caviare, white pepper and black salt sifted on to dainty little dishes. It is a monstrous sin to spend three thousand on the fish market, and then to cramp those roving fishes in a narrow dish. It strongly turns the stomach, if a slave has handled the drinking cup with hands greasy from licking stolen snacks; or if vile mould clings to your ancient bowl.<sup>b</sup> Common brooms, napkins, and sawdust, how little do they cost! But if neglected, how shocking is the scandal! To think of your sweeping mosaic pavements with a dirty palm-broom, or putting unwashed coverlets over Tyrian tapestries, forgetting that the less care and cost these things involve, the more just is blame for their neglect than for things which belong only to the tables of the rich!

HOR. O learned Catius, by our friendship and by the gods I beg you, remember to take me to a lecture, wherever you go to one. For however faithful the memory with which you tell me all, yet as merely reporting you cannot give me the same pleasure. And there is the man's look and bearing!

<sup>b</sup> If the bowl was an antique and therefore valuable, there was all the more reason for its being kept clean.

HORACE

non magni pendis, quia contigit : at mihi cura
non mediocris inest, fontis ut adire remotos atque haurire queam vitae praecepta beatae.

95

---

<sup>a</sup> Horace here parodies a famous passage in Lucretius :
iuvat integros accedere fontes atque haurire.

(De rerum nat. i. 927-8.)

SATIRES, II. IV. 93-95

You think little of having seen him, lucky fellow, because you have had that good fortune, but I have no slight longing to be able to draw near to the sequestered fountains. and to drink in the rules for living happily.<sup>a</sup>

V

THE ART OF LEGACY-HUNTING

THE practice of seeking legacies, especially from those who had no family connexions, seems to have been common in Rome at the beginning of the Imperial period. Horace, therefore, in true satiric fashion, undertakes to lay down rules for the guidance of those who may need advice in playing the game.

The Satire takes the form of a dialogue, and is a burlesque continuation of a famous scene in the Eleventh Odyssey (90-149), where Odysseus (Ulysses), in the lower world, learns from the Theban seer Tiresias that he will return to his home in Ithaca, but only when reduced to poverty. The hero, therefore, desires to ascertain how he may again enrich himself, and the seer instructs him in the lucrative ways of fortune-hunting.

From the obvious reference to Actium in tellure marique magnus (l. 63) we infer that the Satire was not composed before 30 B.C. The skilful parody of epic style shows Horace's satiric power at its best, and it is well to recall the fact that the travestying of heroic themes is traditional in both satire and comedy. The Amphitryo of Plautus, based on some play of the New Attic Comedy, is a good example. Both Lucilius and Varro made use of parody, and it is a prominent feature of the prose satire of Lucian, upon which many modern satires have been modelled, such as Disraeli's Ixion in Heaven and The Infernal Marriage, and Bangs's Houseboat on the Styx. Lucian's resemblances to Horace, which, according to Lejay, are due to a direct knowledge of the Roman poet on the part of Lucian, may really be the result of their common indebtedness to Menippus of Gadara (cf. Fiske, Lucilius and Horace, p. 401). Sellar describes the poem before us as "the most trenchant of all the Satires" of Horace, who doubtless conceived the utmost contempt for the fortune-hunters of his day. No analysis is necessary.

SATIRES, II. v.

V.

Hoc quoque, Teresia,<sup>1</sup> praeter narrata petenti
responde, quibus amissas reparare queam res artibus atque modis. quid rides?

“Iamne doloso
non satis est Ithacam revehi patriosque Penates adspicere?”

O nulli quicquam mentite, vides ut 5
nudus inopsque domum redeam<sup>2</sup> te vate, neque illic aut apotheca procis intacta est aut pecus; atqui<sup>3</sup> et genus et virtus, nisi cum re, vilior alga est.

“Quando pauperiem missis ambagibus horres,
accipe qua ratione queas ditescere.

“Turdus 10
sive aliud privum dabitur tibi, devolet illuc,
res ubi magna nitet domino sene; dulcia poma
et quoscumque feret cultus tibi fundus honores, ante Larem gustet venerabilior Lare dives;
qui quamvis periurus erit, sine gente, cruentus 15
sanguine fraterno, fugitivus, ne tamen illi tu comes exterior, si postulet, ire recuses.”

Utne<sup>4</sup> tegam spurco Damae latus? haud ita Troiae

<sup>1</sup> Tiresia M.    <sup>2</sup> redeat.    <sup>3</sup> aut qui, II.    <sup>4</sup> visne.

<sup>a</sup> By doloso Horace translates πολύτροπος, or one of the several Homeric epithets such as πολύμητις, πολυμήχανος, ποικιλόμητις, applied to Odysseus.

SATIRE V

ULYSSES. One more question pray answer me, Tiresias, besides what you have told me. By what ways and means can I recover my lost fortune ? Why laugh ?

TIRESIAS. What ! not enough for the man of wiles <sup>a</sup> to sail back to Ithaca and gaze upon his household gods ?

ULY. O you who have never spoken falsely to any man, you see how I am returning home, naked and in need, as you foretold ; and there neither cellar nor herd is unrifled by the suitors. And yet birth and worth, without substance, are more paltry than seaweed.

TIR. Since, in plain terms, 'tis poverty you dread, hear by what means you can grow rich.

Suppose a thrush or other dainty be given you for your own, let it wing its way to where grandeur reigns and the owner is old. Your choice apples or whatever glories your trim farm bears you, let the rich man taste before your Lar ; more to be revered than the Lar is he.<sup>b</sup> However perjured he may be, though low of birth, stained with a brother's blood, a runaway slave, yet, if he ask you to walk with him, do not decline to take the outer side.

ULY. What ! give the wall to some dirty Dama ?

<sup>b</sup> First-fruits were offered to the Lares.

HORACE

me gessi, certans semper melioribus.

“ Ergo

pauper eris.”

Fortem hoc animum tolerare iubebo ; 20

et quondam maiora tuli. tu protinus, unde divitias aerisque ruam<sup>1</sup> dic, augur, acervos.

“ Dixi equidem et dico : captes astutus ubique testamenta senum, neu,<sup>2</sup> si vafer unus et alter insidiatorem praeroso fugerit hamo, 25
aut spem deponas aut artem illusus omittas.
magna minorve foro si res certabitur olim,
vivet uter locuples sine gnatis, improbus, ultro
qui meliorem audax vocet in ius, illius esto defensor ; fama civem causaque priorem 30
sperne, domi si gnatus erit fecundave coniunx.
‘ Quinte,’ puta, aut ‘ Publi ’ (gaudent praenomine molles

auriculae), “ tibi me virtus tua fecit amicum ;
ius anceps novi, causas defendere possum ;
eripiet quivis oculos citius mihi quam te 35
contemptum cassa<sup>3</sup> nuce pauperet ; haec mea cura est, ne quid tu perdas neu sis iocus.” ire domum atque pelliculam curare iube ; si cognitor ipse ;
persta atque obdura, seu rubra Canicula findet
infantis statuas, seu pingui tentus omaso 40
Furius hibernas cana nive conspuet Alps.

“ nonne vides,” aliquis cubito stantem prope tangens

<sup>1</sup> eruam E.

<sup>2</sup> seu.

<sup>3</sup> cassa Acr. : quassa MSS.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. κρείσσοσιν ἴφι μάχεσθαι (Iliad, xxi. 486), one of the Homeric echoes in the Satire. Dama is a common slave name.

<sup>b</sup> So Odysseus speaks in Od. xx. 18 :

τέτλαθι δὴ κραδίη· καὶ κύντερον ἄλλο ποτ' ἔτλης.

<sup>c</sup> Horace makes satiric use of some verses from Furius Bibaculus (cf. Sat. i. 10. 36, with note). In Bibaculus, as 200

SATIRES, II. v. 19-42

Not so at Troy did I bear myself, but ever was matched with my betters.<sup>a</sup>

TIR. Then you will be a poor man.

ULY. I'll bid my valiant soul endure this. Ere now worse things have I borne.<sup>b</sup> Go on, O prophet, and tell me how I am to rake up wealth and heaps of gold.

TIR. Well, I have told you, and I tell you now.
Fish craftily in all waters for old men's wills, and though one or two shrewd ones escape your wiles after nibbling off the bait, do not give up hope, or drop the art, though baffled. If some day a case, great or small, be contested in the Forum, whichever of the parties is rich and childless, villain though he be, who with wanton impudence calls the better man into court, do you become his advocate ; spurn
the citizen of the better name and cause, if he have a son at home or a fruitful wife. Say : " Quintus " it may be, or " Publius " (sensitive ears delight in the personal name), " your worth has made me your friend. I know the mazes of the law ; I can defend a case. I will let anyone pluck out my eyes sooner than have him scorn you or rob you of a nutshell.
This is my concern, that you lose nothing, and become not a jest." Bid him go home and nurse his precious self ; become yourself his counsel. Carry on, and stick at it, whether

" the Dog-star red

Dumb statues split,"<sup>c</sup>

or Furius, stuffed with rich tripe,

" With hoary snow bespew the wintry Alps."

" Do you not see," says someone, nudging a neighbour

we know from Quintilian, viii. 6. 17, the second citation opened with Iuppiter as subject.

HORACE

inquiet, 'ut patiens, ut amicis aptus, ut acer?'
plures adnabunt thynni et cetaria crescent.

"Si cui praeterea validus male filius in re 45 praeclara sublatus aletur, ne manifestum caelibis obsequium nudet te, leniter in spem adrepe<sup>1</sup> officiosus, ut et<sup>2</sup> scribare secundus heres et, si quis casus puerum egerit Orco,
in vacuum venias : perraro haec alea fallit. 50

"Qui testamentum tradet tibi cumque legendum, abnuere et tabulas a te remove memento,
sic tamen, ut limis rapias, quid prima secundo
cera velit versu ; solus multisne coheres, veloci percurrere oculo. plerumque recoctus 55
scriba ex quinqueviro corvum deludet hiantem, captatorque dabit risus Nasica Corano."

Num furis ? an prudens ludis me obscura canendo ?

"O Laërtiade, quidquid dicam, aut erit aut non :
divinare etenim magnus mihi donat Apollo." 60

Quid tamen ista velit sibi fabula, si licet,<sup>3</sup> ede.

"Tempore, quo iuvenis Parthis horrendus, ab alto
demissum genus Aenea, tellure marique

<sup>1</sup> arripe a, II.

<sup>2</sup> ut et] ut Goth. : uti Heindorf.

<sup>3</sup> si licet] scilicet aD.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Epist. i. 1. 79, "excipiantque senes quos in vivaria mittant." The cetaria were artificial preserves. The tunnies represent the rich fools who may be caught when needed, cf. captes l. 23, and captator in l. 57.

<sup>b</sup> It was an old Roman custom for fathers to take up in their arms such new-born children as they wished to rear. Sublatus, therefore, might be rendered as "recognized."

<sup>c</sup> i.e. as substitute heir, to be called to the inheritance in case the heir first named dies.

<sup>d</sup> The will, it is supposed, would be written on wax tablets and sealed. On the inside of the first tablet would appear the name of the testator, followed in the second line by the name of the heir.

with his elbow, "how steady he is, how helpful to his friends, how keen?" More tunnies will swim up, and your fish-ponds swell.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>45</sup> Again, if one with a fine fortune rears a sickly son whom he has taken up,<sup>b</sup> then for fear lest open devotion to a childless man betray you, by your attentions worm your way to the hope that you may be named as second heir,<sup>c</sup> and if some chance send the child to his grave, you may pass into his place. Seldom does this game fail.

<sup>57</sup> Suppose someone gives you his will to read, be sure to decline and push the tablets from you; yet in such a way that with a side glance you may catch the substance of the second line on the first page.<sup>d</sup> Swiftly run your eye across to see whether you are sole heir or share with others. Quite often a constable, new-boiled into a clerk, will dupe the gaping raven, and Nasica the fortune-hunter will make sport for Coranus.<sup>e</sup>

ULY. Are you mad? or do you purposely make fun of me with your dim oracle?

TIR. O son of Laertes, whatever I say will or will not be<sup>f</sup>; for prophecy is great Apollo's gift to me.

ULY. But what means that story? Tell me, if you may.

TIR. In the days when a youthful hero,<sup>g</sup> the Parthian's dread, scion of high Aeneas's lineage, shall <sup>a</sup> In recoctus there is a reference to the legend of Medea, who restored his youth to Aeson by boiling him in a caldron. The quinqueviri were very humble police officials. Coranus had been one of these, but later had become a public clerk, like Horace himself (Sat. ii. 6. 36). In corvum hiantem, there is a reference to the fable of the raven which the fox flattered for its singing, and so caused it to drop the cheese.

<sup>f</sup> A burlesque on oracular utterances.

<sup>g</sup> i.e. the young Octavius, born 63 B.C.

HORACE

magnus erit, forti nubet procera Corano
 filia Nasicae, metuentis reddere soldum. 65
 tum gener hoc faciet : tabulas socero dabit atque ut legat orabit ; multum Nasica negatas accipiet tandem et tacitus leget, invenietque
 nil sibi legatum praeter plorare suisque.

“ Illud ad haec iubeo : mulier si forte dolosa 70
 libertusve senem delirum temperet, illis accedas socius ; laudes, lauderis ut absens ;
 adiuvat hoc quoque, sed vincit<sup>1</sup> longe prius ipsum expugnare caput. scribet<sup>2</sup> mala carmina vecors :
 laudato. scortator erit : cave te roget ; ultro 75
 Penelopam facilis potiori trade.”

Putasne,

perduci poterit tam frugi tamque pudica,
 quam nequiere<sup>3</sup> proci recto depellere cursu ?

“ Venit enim magnum donandi parca iuventus, nec tantum Veneris quantum studiosa culinae. 80
 sic tibi Penelope frugi est ; quae si semel uno
 de sene gustarit tecum partita lucellum,
 ut canis a corio numquam absterrebitur uncto.

“ Me sene quod dicam factum est. anus improba Thebis
 ex testamento sic est elata : cadaver 85
 unctum oleo largo nudis umeris tulit heres,

<sup>1</sup> vincet a Goth.

<sup>2</sup> scribit.

<sup>3</sup> nequiere MSS.

---

* The story, which was doubtless familiar to the readers of Horace's own day, is now obscure. Nasica probably owed money to Coranus, and gave him his daughter in marriage, hoping that the son-in-law would by will free him from his debt. This would seem to imply that the son-in-law was older than the father-in-law.

be mighty by land and sea, the tall daughter of Nasica, who dreads paying up in full, shall wed gallant Coranus. Then shall the son-in-law thus proceed : to his father-in-law he shall give the tablets of his will, and pray him to read them. After many a refusal at length Nasica shall take them, and read them to himself, and shall find that nothing is left to him and his but—to whine.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>70</sup> Here's another hint I give you. If it so chance that some crafty dame or freedman sways an old dotard, make common cause with them. Praise them, that they may praise you behind your back. This too helps ; but far better is it to storm the citadel itself. Will the idiot write poor verses ? Praise them. Is he a libertine ? See that he has not to ask you ; yourself obligingly hand over Penelope to your better.

ULY. You think so ! Can she be tempted,—she so good, so pure, whom the suitors could not turn from the straight course ?

TIR. Yes, for the young suitors who came were sparing of their gifts ; their thoughts were not so much on loving as on eating. So it is your Penelope is virtuous ; but if just once she gets from one old man a taste of gain in partnership with you, then she will be like the hound, which can never be frightened away from the greasy hide.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>84</sup> I will tell you something that happened when I was old.<sup>c</sup> A wicked old crone at Thebes, by the terms of her will, was buried thus : her corpse, well oiled, her heir carried on his bare shoulders. She

<sup>b</sup> i.e. a hide to which pieces of fat still cling.

<sup>c</sup> The speaker, now long dead, is a shade in the lower world.

HORACE

scilicet elabi si<sup>1</sup> posset mortua ; credo,
quod nimium institerat<sup>2</sup> viventi.

“ Cautus adito :

neu desis operae neve immoderatus abundes.
difficilem et morosum offendet<sup>3</sup> garrulus ; ultra<sup>4</sup> 90
non etiam sileas. Davus sis comicus atque stes capite obstipo, multum similis metuenti.
obsequio grassare ; mone, si increbruit aura,
cautus uti velet carum caput ; extrahe turba oppositis umeris ; aurem substringe loquaci. 95
importunus amat laudari : donec ‘ ohe iam ! ’
ad caelum manibus sublatis dixerit, urge,
crescentem tumidis infla sermonibus utrem.

“ Cum te servitio longo curaueque levari,
et certum vigilans, ‘ quartae sit partis Ulixes,’ 100
audieris, ‘ heres ’ : ergo nunc Dama sodalis nusquam est ? unde mihi tam fortem tamque fidelem ? ’

sparge subinde et, si paulum potes, illacrimare ; est<sup>5</sup> gaudia prodentem<sup>6</sup> vultum<sup>7</sup> celare. sepulcrum
permissum arbitrio sine sordibus exstrue : funus 105
egregie factum laudet vicinia. si quis
forte coheredum senior male tussiet, huic tu dic, ex parte tua seu fundi sive domus sit emptor, gaudentem nummo te addicere.

“ Sed me
imperiosa trahit Proserpina : vive valeque.” 110

<sup>1</sup> si] ut sic V.

<sup>2</sup> extiterat.

<sup>3</sup> offendit φψλ.

<sup>4</sup> ultro.

<sup>5</sup> est deleted in a.

<sup>6</sup> prudentem.

<sup>7</sup> multum φψλ.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. “ Davoque Chremeta eludente,” Sat. i. 10. 40.

SATIRES, II. v. 87-110

wanted, of course, to see whether she could give him the slip when dead. I suppose, when she was living, he had borne too hard upon her.

<sup>88</sup> Be cautious in your approach; neither fail in zeal, nor show zeal beyond measure. A chatterbox will offend the peevish and morose; yet you must not also be silent beyond bounds. Act the Davus of the comedy,<sup>a</sup> and stand with head bowed, much like one overawed. With flattery make your advances; warn him, if the breeze stiffens, carefully to cover up his precious pate; shoulder a way and draw him out of a crowd; make a trumpet of your ear when he is chattering. Does he bore you with his love of praise? Then ply him with it till with hands uplifted to heaven he cry "enough!" and blow up the swelling bladder with turgid phrases.

<sup>89</sup> And when from your long care and servitude he sets you free, and wide awake you hear the words, "To one-fourth let Ulysses be heir," then, now and then, scatter about such words as these, "Ah! is my old friend Dama now no more? Where shall I find one so firm, so faithful?" and if you can do a bit of it, drop in some tears. If your face betray joy, you can hide it. If the tomb is left to your discretion, build it in style: let the neighbours praise the handsome funeral. If one of your co-heirs happens to be older than you, and has a bad cough, say to him that if he would like to buy land or a house that is in your share, you would gladly knock it down to him for a trifle.

But Proserpine, our queen, calls me back. Live and fare well!

VI

TOWN AND COUNTRY LIFE

THIS famous Satire, which has been so happily imitated by Pope, contrasts the annoyances and discomforts of life in Rome with the peace and happiness enjoyed by the poet on his beloved Sabine farm.

It is probably owing to its peculiarly personal tone that for this Satire Horace does not set up a dialogue framework, but reverts to the monologue form of the First Book, although a large portion of the poem, viz. the fable of the Town and the Country Mouse, is put into the mouth of another speaker.

Kiessling has pointed out how the hours of morning (1-23) and of evening (60-76), as spent in the country, suggest the two side-pictures of a triptych, which enclose the central and larger picture, that of a day passed in Rome (23-59). The contrast thus presented between the peacefulness of rural life and the restlessness of city life is then summed up in the delightful allegory with which the Satire concludes (79-117). Nothing could be more artistic than such an arrangement.

Besides being one of the most charming of Horace's compositions, this Satire is important for settling some of the chronology of Horace's life. Thus l. 38

SATIRES, II. VI.

seems to refer to the time which included the Battle of Actium and succeeding events, when Maecenas, in the absence of Octavian, had full control in Rome and Italy. The mention of the Dacians in l. 53 reminds us that these people wavered between Octavian and Antony and that Crassus was sent against them in 30 B.C. Again, the assignment of lands to the veterans, referred to in l. 55, is doubtless the reward promised for services at Actium. In this connexion some of the soldiers mutinied in the winter of 31 B.C. The Satire therefore was composed late in 31 B.C. or early in 30 B.C., and it follows from ll. 40 ff. that Horace entered the circle of Maecenas in 39 or 38 B.C. The Sabine farm was given to the poet some six years later.

VI.

Hoc erat in votis : modus agri non ita magnus,
 hortus ubi et tecto vicinus iugis aquae fons
 et paulum silvae super his foret. auctius atque di melius fecere. bene est. nil amplius oro, Maia nate, nisi ut propria haec mihi munera faxis. 5
 si neque maiorem feci ratione mala rem nec sum facturus vitio culpave<sup>1</sup> minorem, si veneror stultus nihil horum : “ o si angulus ille
 proximus accedat, qui nunc denormat agellum !
 o<sup>2</sup> si urnam argenti fors quae mihi monstret, ut illi, 10
 thesauro invento qui mercennarius agrum
 illum ipsum mercatus aravit, dives amico Hercule ! ” si quod adest gratum iuvat, hac prece te oro :

pingue pecus domino facias et cetera praeter
 ingenium, utque soles, custos mihi maximus adsis ! 15

Ergo ubi me in montes et in arcem ex urbe removi.
 quid prius illustrem saturis Musaque pedestri ?
 nec mala me ambitio perdit nec plumbeus Auster autumnusque gravis, Libitinae quaestus acerbae.

<sup>1</sup> -ve] -que a Goth.

<sup>2</sup> heu  $\phi\psi$ .

<sup>a</sup> In the opening words Horace gives utterance to a feeling of deep satisfaction as he contemplates the scene before him in the morning sunshine. His former prayer has been realized. Hence the past tense of erat.

<sup>b</sup> Mercury was god of luck and gain ; Hercules the god of treasure-trove (see ll. 12, 13 below).

SATIRE VI

This is what I prayed for ! <sup>a</sup>—a piece of land not so very large, where there would be a garden, and near the house a spring of ever-flowing water, and up above these a bit of woodland. More and better than this have the gods done for me. I am content. Nothing more do I ask, O son of Maia, <sup>b</sup> save that thou make these blessings last my life long. If I have neither made my substance larger by evil ways, nor mean to make it smaller by excesses or neglect ; if I offer up no such foolish prayers as these : “ O if there could be added that near corner, which now spoils the shape of my little farm ! O that some lucky strike would disclose to me a pot of money, like the man who, having found a treasure-trove, bought and ploughed the self-same ground he used to work on hire, enriched by favour of Hercules ” !—if what I have gives me comfort and content, then thus I pray to thee : make fat the flocks I own, and all else save my wit, and, as thou art wont, still be my chief guardian !

<sup>16</sup> So, now that from the city I have taken myself off to my castle in the hills, to what should I sooner give renown in the Satires of my prosaic Muse ? Here no wretched place-hunting worries me to death, nor the leaden scirocco, nor sickly autumn, that brings gain to hateful Libitina.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>c</sup> The old Italian goddess Libitina, sometimes identified with Persephone, presided over funerals.

HORACE

Matutine pater, seu "Iane" libentius audis, 20
unde homines operum primos vitaeque labores instituunt (sic dis placitum), tu carminis esto principium. Romae sponsorem me rapis: "heia, ne prior officio quisquam respondeat, urge."
sive Aquilo radit terras seu bruma nivalem 25
interiore diem gyro trahit, ire necesse est.
postmodo, quod mi obsit, clare certumque locuto luctandum in turba et facienda iniuria tardis.
"quid tibi vis, insane, et quam rem<sup>1</sup> agis?" improbus
urget

iratis precibus: "tu pulses omne quod obstat, 30
ad Maecenatem memori si mente recurras."

Hoc iuvat et melli<sup>2</sup> est, non mentiar. at simul atras ventum est Esquilias, aliena negotia centum per caput et circa saliunt latus. "ante secundam Roscius orabat sibi adesses ad Puteal cras." 35
"de re communi scribae magna atque nova te orabant hodie meminisses, Quinte, reverti."

"imprimat his, cura, Maecenas signa tabellis."
dixeris, "experiar": "si vis, potes," addit et instat
Septimus octavo propior<sup>3</sup> iam fugerit annus, 40

<sup>1</sup> quam rem Bentley: MSS. show quas res, which can be kept if tibi or agis is deleted. Thus Orelli, Wickham, Lejay.

<sup>2</sup> mel, II.

<sup>3</sup> propior E: proprior a.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Milton's "Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream" (Par. Lost, iii. 6). The language is mock heroic, and the apostrophe of the god of the morn, or of beginnings, indicates the time of day when Horace was writing.

<sup>b</sup> Horace gives an illustration of early morning duties in Rome.

<sup>c</sup> The circles apparently traced by the sun get smaller up to the winter solstice.

<sup>d</sup> Probably the sponsor was directed by the court to speak thus.

<sup>e</sup> i.e. this recognition of his intimacy with Maecenas.

<sup>20</sup> O Father of the dawn, or Janus, if so thou hearest rather,<sup>a</sup> from whom men take the beginnings of the work and toil of life—such is Heaven's will—be thou the prelude of my song! At Rome thou hurriest me off to be surety<sup>b</sup>: "Come! bestir yourself, lest someone answer duty's call before you." Whether the North-wind sweeps the earth, or winter drags on the snowy day in narrower circle,<sup>c</sup> go I must. Later, when I have said in clear and certain tones<sup>d</sup> what may work me harm, I must battle in the crowd and do damage to the slow of pace. "What do you mean, madman? What are you driving at?" So some ruffian assails me with angry curses: "You would jostle everything in your way, should you be posting back to Maecenas, thinking only of him."

<sup>32</sup> That<sup>e</sup> gives pleasure and is like honey, I'll not deny. But as soon as one comes to the gloomy<sup>f</sup> Esquiline, a hundred concerns of others dance through my head and all about me: "Roscius begs you to meet him to-morrow at Libo's Wall<sup>g</sup> before seven o'clock." "The clerks beg you, Quintus, to be sure to return to-day on some fresh and important business of common interest.<sup>h</sup>" "Have Maecenas put his seal to these papers." If you say, "I'll try," "You can, if you will," he adds insistently.

<sup>40</sup> The seventh year—nay, nearer the eighth—will

<sup>i</sup> "Gloomy," because of the old associations of the place. See Satire i. 8 & 14, note c.

<sup>g</sup> The praetor's tribunal was near the Puteal Libonis, a place in the Forum, which, having been struck by lightning, was enclosed by a wall, and regarded as sacred.

<sup>h</sup> Horace, being himself a member of the guild of scribae, is addressed on familiar terms. He had been a member of the quaestor's staff.

HORACE

ex quo Maecenas me coepit habere suorum
in numero, dumtaxat ad hoc, quem tollere raeda vellet iter faciens, et cui concedere nugas
hoc genus: "hora quota est?" "Thraex est Gallina Syro par?"

"matutina parum cautos iam frigora mordent;" 45
et quae rimosa bene deponuntur<sup>1</sup> in aure.
per totum hoc tempus subiectior in diem et horam invidiae noster. ludos spectaverat<sup>2</sup> una, luserat<sup>3</sup> in Campo: "fortunae filius!" omnes.
frigidus a rostris manat per compita rumor: 50
quicumque obvius est me consulit: "o bone, nam te scire, deos quoniam propius<sup>4</sup> contingis, oportet, numquid de Dacis audisti?" nil equidem. "ut tu
semper eris derisor!" at<sup>5</sup> omnes di exagitent me, si quicquam. "quid? militibus promissa Triquetra praedia Caesar an est Itala tellure daturus?" 56
iurantem me scire nihil mirantur<sup>6</sup> ut unum
scilicet egregii mortalem altique silenti.

Perditur haec inter misero lux non sine votis:
o rus, quando ego te aspiciam! quandoque licebit 60
nunc veterum libris, nunc somno et inertibus horis,<sup>7</sup> ducere sollicitae iucunda obliviae vitae!
o quando faba Pythagorae cognata simulque

<sup>1</sup> disponuntur E.    <sup>2</sup> spectaverit.    <sup>3</sup> luserit.    <sup>4</sup> propius φψλ.

<sup>5</sup> at Goth.: ad MSS.    <sup>6</sup> miratur φψ.    <sup>7</sup> hortis φψ.

<sup>a</sup> The reference is to some sporting event of the day. The men mentioned were gladiators, one being armed like a Thracian.

<sup>b</sup> This colloquial use of noster = "I", for which we have examples in Plautus, enables the writer to avoid a tone of egoism. Cf. ἀνὴρ ὅδ'ε.

<sup>c</sup> Sicily. After the battle of Actium the soldiers who had served with Octavius had lands allotted to them. The expression used for Sicily is probably an echo of Lucretius (i. 717) "insula . . . triquetris terrarum . . . in oris."

soon have sped, since Maecenas began to count me among his friends—merely thus far, as one he would like to take in his carriage when on a journey, and confide to his ears trifles like this: “What’s the time?” “Is the Thracian Chicken a match for Syrus?”<sup>a</sup> “The morning frosts are nipping now, if people are careless,” and such chat as is safely dropped into a leaky ear. For all these years, every day and hour, our friend<sup>b</sup> has been more and more the butt of envy. Has he viewed the games, or played ball in the Campus with Maecenas? “Fortune’s favourite!” all cry. Does a chilly rumour run from the Rostra through the streets? Whoever comes my way asks my opinion: “My good sir, you must know—you come so much closer to the gods: you haven’t heard any news about the Dacians, have you?” “None whatever.” “How you will always mock at us!” But heaven confound me, if I have heard a word! “Well, is it in the three-cornered isle,<sup>c</sup> or on Italian soil, that Caesar means to give the soldiers their promised lands?” When I swear I know nothing, they marvel at me as, forsooth, the man of all men remarkably and profoundly reticent.

<sup>59</sup> Amid such trifling, alas! I waste my day, praying the while: O rural home: when shall I behold you! When shall I be able, now with books of the ancients, now with sleep and idle hours, to quaff sweet forgetfulness of life’s cares! O when shall beans; brethren of Pythagoras,<sup>d</sup> be served me, and <sup>d</sup> Pythagoras forbade the eating of beans as well as of the flesh of animals, in the latter case because of his doctrine of transmigration of souls. Horace humorously applies this doctrine to beans as well.

HORACE

uncta satis pingui ponentur holuscula lardo !
 o noctes cenaque deum ! quibus ipse meique 65
 ante Larem proprium vescor vernasque procaces
 pasco libatis dapibus. prout cuique libido est, siccatur inaequalis calices conviva, solutus
 legibus insanis, seu quis capit acria fortis pocula, seu modicis uvescit<sup>1</sup> laetius. ergo 70
 sermo oritur, non de villis domibusve alienis, nec male necne Lepos saltet ; sed quod magis ad nos
 pertinet et nescire malum est, agitamus : utrumne divitiis homines an sint virtute beati ;
 quidve ad amicitias, usus rectumne, trahat nos ; 75
 et quae sit natura boni summumque quid eius.

Cervius haec inter vicinus<sup>2</sup> garrit anilis
 ex re fabellas. si quis nam laudat Arelli sollicitas ignarus opes, sic incipit : “ olim rusticus urbanum murem mus paupere fertur 80
 accepisse cavo, veterem vetus hospes amicum,
 asper et attentus quaesitis, ut tamen artum solveret hospitii animum. quid multa ? neque ille sepositi ciceris nec longae invidit avenae, aridum et ore ferens acinum semesaque lardi 85
 frustra<sup>3</sup> dedit, cupiens varia fastidia cena vincere tangentis male singula dente superbo ;
 cum pater ipse domus palea porrectus in horna
 esset ador loliumque, dapibus meliora relinquens.
 tandem urbanus ad hunc, “ quid te iuvat,” inquit, “ amice, 90

<sup>1</sup> humescit E.

<sup>2</sup> vicino E : vicinos V.

<sup>3</sup> frustra Eφλ Goth. : furta Peerlkamp.

---

<sup>a</sup> Another plausible interpretation of libatis dapibus is “after due offering,” i.e. to the Lares, before the mensa secunda with its wine-drinking began.

with them greens well larded with fat bacon ! O nights and feasts divine ! When before my own Lar we dine, my friends and I, and feed the saucy slaves from the barely tasted dishes.<sup>a</sup> Each guest, as is his fancy, drains cups big or small, not bound by crazy laws,<sup>b</sup> whether one can stand strong bumpers in gallant style, or with mild cups mellows more to his liking. And so begins a chat, not about other men's homes and estates, nor whether Lepos dances well or ill ; but we discuss matters which concern us more, and of which it is harmful to be in ignorance—whether wealth or virtue makes men happy, whether self-interest or uprightness<sup>c</sup> leads us to friendship, what is the nature of the good and what is its highest form.

<sup>77</sup> Now and then our neighbour Cervius rattles off old wives' tales that fit the case. Thus, if anyone, blind to its anxieties, praises the wealth of Arellius, he thus begins : " Once on a time—such is the tale—a country mouse welcomed a city mouse in his poor hole, host and guest old friends both. Roughly he fared, frugal of his store, yet could open his thrifty soul in acts of hospitality. In short, he grudged not his hoard of vetch or long oats, but bringing in his mouth a dried raisin and nibbled bits of bacon he served them, being eager by varying the fare to overcome the daintiness of a guest, who, with squeamish tooth, would barely touch each morsel. Meanwhile, outstretched on fresh straw, the master of the house himself ate spelt and darnel, leaving the titbits to his friend. At last the city mouse cries to him : " What pleasure can you have, my friend,

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 2. 123 and note.

<sup>c</sup> Fundamental questions of ethical philosophy.

HORACE

praerupti nemoris patientem vivere dorso ?
 vis tu homines urbemque feris praeponere silvis ?
 carpe viam, mihi crede, comes. terrestria quando mortalis animas vivunt sortita, neque ulla est aut magno aut parvo leti fuga, quo, bone,<sup>1</sup> circa, 95 dum licet, in rebus iucundis vive beatus ;
 vive memor, quam sis aevi brevis." haec ubi dicta
 agrestem pepulere, domo levis exsilit ; inde ambo propositum peragunt iter, urbis aventes moenia nocturni subrepere.

Iamque tenebat 100

nox medium caeli spatium; cum ponit uterque
 in locuplete domo vestigia, rubro ubi cocco tincta super lectos canderet vestis eburnos, multaue de magna superessent fercula cena,
 quae procul exstructis inerant hesternae canistris. 105
 ergo ubi purpurea porrectum in veste locavit agrestem, veluti succinctus cursitat hospes / continuatque dapes, nec non verniliter<sup>2</sup> ipsis<sup>3</sup>
 fungitur officiis, praelambens omne quod adfert.<sup>4</sup> ille cubans gaudet mutata sorte bonisque 110
 rebus agit laetum convivam, cum subito ingens
 valvarum strepitus lectis excussit utrumque.
 currere per totum pavidi conclave, magisque
 exanimes trepidare, simul domus alta Molossis personuit canibus. tum rusticus, " haud mihi vita 115
 est opus hac," ait " et valeas : me silva cavusque
 tutus ab insidiis tenui solabitur ervo."

<sup>1</sup> bene E.
<sup>2</sup> ipse Lambinus.

<sup>2</sup> vernaliter.
<sup>4</sup> afflat φψλ.

in living so hard a life on the ridge of a steep grove ? Wouldn't you put people and the city above these wild woods ? Take my advice : set out with me. Inasmuch as all creatures that live on earth have mortal souls, and for neither great nor small is there escape from death, therefore, good sir, while you may, live happy amid joys ; live mindful ever of how brief your time is ! " These words struck home with the rustic, who lightly leaped forth from his house. Then both pursue the journey as planned, eager to creep under the city walls by night.

<sup>100</sup> And now night was holding the mid space of heaven, when the two set foot in a wealthy palace, where covers dyed in scarlet glittered on ivory couches, and many courses remained over from a great dinner of the evening before, in baskets piled up hard by. So when the town mouse has the rustic stretched out on purple covers, he himself bustles about in waiter-style, serving course after course, and doing all the duties of the home-bred slave, first tasting everything he serves. The other, lying at ease, enjoys his changed lot, and amid the good cheer is playing the happy guest, when of a sudden a terrible banging of the doors tumbled them both from their couches. In panic they run the length of the hall, and still more terror-stricken were they, as the lofty palace rang with the barking of Molossian hounds. Then says the rustic : " No use have I for such a life, and so farewell : my wood and hole, secure from alarms, will solace me with homely vetch."

VII

ONLY THE WISE ARE FREE

THE scene is laid in Rome during the Saturnalia, when slaves were treated with great indulgence (l. 4 and Sat. ii. 3. 5). Davus, the slave of Horace, is therefore permitted to speak his mind freely to his master (1-5).

He remarks that some men are consistent in their vices, others waver between vice and virtue. Horace is an inconsistent man. He praises the good old times, but would not go back to them if he could. In town he pines for the country, in the country he longs for the town. If not invited out, he pretends to be glad, but if an invitation from Maecenas comes at a late hour, off he runs in great excitement, leaving his expectant parasites in the lurch, and proving that he is no better than they (6-42).

"What," asks Davus, "if you, the master, be found to be a greater fool than I, your slave?" Such an audacious remark provokes Horace's wrath, but Davus is allowed to report the lessons of wisdom, which a servant of Crispinus had overheard at the door of his master's lecture-room, and had passed on to him (42-45).

The so-called master, victim of his passions, pursues intrigues, stoops to mean devices to gain his ends, runs all sorts of risks, and sacrifices character and everything else that he has. He is a real slave, whom no manumission can free, and his Davus is but his fellow-slave. He is a mere puppet, worked by wires that others pull (46-82).

HORACE

Who, then, is free? Only the wise man, who is complete master of himself. He who is subject to passion is never that (83-94).

Again, the so-called master is not above his slave in other faults. The latter wastes time gazing on crude posters, the former is crazy over some great artist's paintings. The slave likes pasties and gets a thrashing, the master loves grand suppers and suffers from indigestion. The slave swaps the brush he has stolen for a bunch of grapes, the master sells off his estates to fill his belly. Why, this master cannot bear his own company. He is a runaway and vagabond, ever seeking, though in vain, to baffle care (95-115).

This is too much for the angered master, who threatens to send his slave out to his Sabine farm (116-118).

This Satire is a close companion of the third, and deals with another Stoic paradox, viz. that only the philosopher is free, ὅτι μόνος ὁ σοφὸς ἐλεύθερος. Both Satires have the Saturnalia—a time of free speech—as their setting, and are much alike in substance, both dealing with the follies of mankind, and handling the theme in a very similar dramatic fashion. Here the Stoic teacher Crispinus corresponds to Stertinius. The slave Davus, who finds that, being wise, he is free, takes the place of the social outcast Damasippus, who discovered that he was no more mad than other men. In both Satires Horace is the auditor of the sermon, the lessons of which he must apply to himself. In both he feigns an outburst of anger.

222

SATIRES, II. VII.

Though Horace thus allows his own name to be used, the dialogue is really between any slave and any master. It is true that, to heighten the humour of the scene, he introduces, at the beginning and perhaps at the end of the criticism of the master (so ll. 22-35 ; 111-115), some of the atmosphere of reality, but so far as the main features of the master's portrait are concerned, it would be more correct to regard the slave Davus, the preacher of wisdom, as the Horace of real life. That the poet is not describing himself with any consistency is clear from ll. 102, ff., where he is accused of gluttony, whereas we know that he was very abstemious (cf. Sat. i. 5. 7-9). The seeming self-accusation as to serious offences, therefore, we may put down to dramatic necessity or to comic exaggeration.

The dialogue form is maintained throughout, though during the delivery of Crispinus's lecture it is held in suspense.

VII.<sup>1</sup>

“ Iamdudum ausculto et cupiens tibi dicere servus pauca reformido.” Davusne ? “ ita, Davus, amicum mancipium domino et frugi quod sit satis, hoc est, ut vitale putes.” age, libertate Decembri, quando ita maiores voluerunt, utere ; narra. 5

“ Pars hominum vitiis gaudet constanter et urget propositum ; pars multa natat, modo recta capessens, interdum pravis obnoxia. saepe notatus cum tribus anellis, modo laeva Priscus inani, vixit inaequalis, clavum ut mutaret in horas, 10 aedibus ex magnis subito se conderet, unde mundior exiret vix libertinus honeste ; iam moechus Romae, iam mallet doctus<sup>2</sup> Athenis vivere, Vertumnis, quotquot sunt, natus iniquis. scurra Volanerius, postquam illi iusta cheragra 15 contudit articulos, qui pro se tolleretur atque mitteret in phimum<sup>3</sup> talos, mercede diurna

<sup>1</sup> The Bland. mss. make no division between this and the previous Satire ; so too Bentley : not so aEλ or Porph.

<sup>2</sup> doctor V, II ; so Lejay.

<sup>3</sup> pyrgum Goth. ; no doubt a gloss.

<sup>a</sup> The Satire begins like a scene in comedy. The slave has had to listen to his master's preaching, and now would like to have his turn at fault-finding.

<sup>b</sup> Alluding to the familiar saying that the good die young.

<sup>c</sup> During the Saturnalia, which came in December, slaves were allowed great freedom, because, in the age of Saturn, all men were equal.

<sup>d</sup> As senator, Priscus would wear a broad stripe ; as eques,

SATIRE VII

DAVUS. I've been listening some time, and wishing to say a word to you, but as a slave I dare not.<sup>a</sup>

HORACE. Is that Davus?

DAV. Yes, Davus, a slave loyal to his master, and fairly honest—that is, so that you need not think him too good to live.<sup>b</sup>

HOR. Come, use the licence December allows,<sup>c</sup> since our fathers willed it so. Have your say.

DAV. Some men persist in their love of vice and stick to their purpose; the greater number waver, now aiming at the right, at times giving way to evil. Thus Priscus, who often attracted notice by wearing three rings, but once in a while by wearing none, was so fickle in his life, that he would change his stripe every hour.<sup>d</sup> Passing from a stately mansion, he would bury himself in a den, from which a decent freedman could scarcely emerge without shame. Now he would choose to live in Rome as a rake, now as a sage in Athens—a man born when every single Vertumnus was out of sorts.<sup>e</sup> Volanerius, the jester, when the gout he had earned crippled his finger-joints, kept a man, hired at a daily wage, to pick a narrow one. Rings were worn on the left hand (laeva); only a fop would wear more than one.

<sup>a</sup> Vertumnus, god of the changing year, could assume any shape he pleased. For the form of expression cf. "lymphis iratis," Sat. i. 5. 97.

HORACE

conductum pavit; quanto constantior isdem<sup>1</sup> in vitiis, tanto levius<sup>2</sup> miser ac prior<sup>3</sup> illo,<sup>4</sup>
qui iam contento, iam<sup>5</sup> laxo fune laborat.” 20

Non dices hodie, quorsum haec tam putida tendant, furcifer? “ad te, inquam.” quo pacto, pessime?
“Laudas

fortunam et mores antiquae plebis, et idem,
si quis ad illa deus subito te agat, usque recuses,
aut quia non sentis quod clamas rectius esse, 25
aut quia non firmus rectum defendis, et haeres
nequiquam caeno cupiens evellere plantam.
Romae rus optas; absentem rusticus urbem
tollis ad astra levis. si nusquam es forte vocatus ad cenam, laudas securum holus ac, velut usquam 30
vinctus eas, ita te felicem dicis amasque,
quod nusquam tibi sit potandum. iusserit ad se Maecenas serum sub lumina prima venire convivam: ‘nemon oleum feret<sup>6</sup> ocus? ecquis<sup>7</sup>
audit?’ cum magno blateras clamore fugisque.<sup>8</sup> 35
Mulvius et scurrae, tibi non referenda precati,
discedunt. ‘etenim fateor me,’ dixerit ille, ‘duci ventre levem, nasum nidore supinor,’<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> idem Ελ.

<sup>2</sup> levius] est melius, II.

<sup>3</sup> ac prior] acrior aE Goth.

<sup>4</sup> illo φ<sup>2</sup> one Bland.: ille best mss., yet an error.

<sup>5</sup> iam . . . iam] tam . . . quam φψ: second iam omitted E; becomes quam a.

<sup>6</sup> fert El Vollmer.

<sup>7</sup> et quis E.

<sup>8</sup> furisque V.

<sup>9</sup> supino, II.

<sup>a</sup> The source of the figure is probably an animal tied by a rope, and pulled up with a jerk, as it tries to get free.

<sup>b</sup> We are to suppose that Horace, who is already dining at home, gets a late invitation from Maecenas to fill a vacant place. The oil he calls for is needed for the lantern to light him through the streets.

up the dice for him and put them in the box. As he was the more persistent in his vices, so he was the less unhappy and the better man, than the one who, with rope now taut, now loose, is in distress.<sup>a</sup>

HOR. Are you to take all day, you scape-gallows, in telling me the point of such rot?

DAV. 'Tis you, I say.

HOR. How so, villain?

DAV. You praise the fortune and manners of the men of old; and yet, if on a sudden some god were for taking you back to those days, you would refuse every time; either because you don't really think that what you are ranting is sounder, or because you are wobbly in defending the right, and, though vainly longing to pull your foot from the filth, yet stick fast in it. At Rome you long for the country; in the country, you extol to the stars the distant town, you fickle one! If so it be that you are asked out nowhere to supper, you praise your quiet dish of herbs, and, as though you were in chains when you do go anywhere, you call yourself lucky, and hug yourself, because you have not to go out for some carousal. Let but Maecenas bid you at a late hour come to him as a guest, just at lamp-lighting time: "Won't someone bring me oil this instant?"<sup>b</sup> Does nobody hear me?" So you scream and bawl, then tear off. Mulvius and his fellow-jesters sneak off with curses for you that I cannot repeat.<sup>c</sup> "Yes," he would say, "'tis true that I'm a fickle creature, led by my stomach. I curl up my nose for a savoury

<sup>a</sup> Mulvius was a parasite, who had come to share Horace's dinner and is now disappointed. His quoted remarks show that Davus looked upon Horace himself as a parasite at the table of Maecenas.

HORACE

imbecillus, iners, si quid vis, adde, popino.
 tu cum sis quod ego et fortassis nequior, ultro 40
 insectere velut melior verbisque decoris obvolvas vitium? ' quid, si me stultior ipso<sup>1</sup> quingentis empto drachmis deprenderis? aufer
 me voltu terrere; manum stomachumque teneto,
 dum quae Crispini docuit me ianitor edo. 45
 "Te coniunx aliena capit, meretricula Davum.
 peccat uter nostrum cruce dignius? acris ubi me
 natura intendit,<sup>2</sup> sub clara nudà lucerna quaecumque exēpit turgentis verbera caudae, clunibus aut agitavit equum lasciva supinum, 50
 dimittit neque famosum neque sollicitum ne
 ditior aut formae melioris meiat eodem.
 tu<sup>3</sup> cum proiectis insignibus, anulo equestri Romanoque habitu, prodix ex iudice<sup>1</sup> Dama turpis, odoratum caput obscurante lacernā,<sup>4</sup> 55
 non es quod simulas? metuens induceris atque altercante<sup>5</sup> libidinibus tremis ossa pavore.
 quid refert, uri virgis ferroque necari
 auctoratus eas, an turpi clausus in arca, quo te demisit<sup>6</sup> peccati conscia erilis, 60
 contractum genibus tangas caput? estne marito matronae peccantis in ambo<sup>7</sup> iusta potestas?
 in corruptorem vel iustior. illa tamen se

<sup>1</sup> ipse E.    <sup>2</sup> incendit Goth.    <sup>3</sup> te, II.    <sup>4</sup> lucerna E.
<sup>5</sup> alternante Goth.    <sup>6</sup> dimisit, II.    <sup>7</sup> ambos.

<sup>a</sup> Roughly equivalent to £20, or $100, a low price for a slave.

<sup>b</sup> Davus is a σπερμολόγος, "a picker up of learning's crumbs," and he has picked them up, not from the Stoic Crispinus himself, but at second-hand from his door-keeper, who would be in a position to catch some scraps of the lectures delivered in the school-room.

<sup>c</sup> The term iudex implies a citizen of good standing.

smell. I am weak, lazy, and, if you like to add, a toper. But you, since you are just the same and maybe worse, would you presume to assail me, as though you were a better man, and would you throw over your own vices a cloak of seemingly words? "What if you are found to be a greater fool than even I, who cost you five hundred drachmas? <sup>a</sup> Don't try to scare me by your looks. Hold back your hand and temper, while I set forth the lessons taught me by the porter of Crispinus. <sup>b</sup>

<sup>46</sup> You are the slave of another man's wife; Davus of a poor harlot. Which of us commits a sin more deserving of the cross? When vehement nature drives me, she who satisfies my passion sends me away neither disgraced nor anxious lest some richer or more handsome man possess her. You, when you have cast aside your badges, the ring of knighthood and your Roman dress, and step forth, no longer a judge, <sup>c</sup> but a low Dama, with a cape hiding your perfumed head, are you not what you pretend to be? Full of fear, you are let into the house, and you tremble with a terror that clashes with your passions. What matters it, whether you go off in bondage, <sup>d</sup> to be scourged and slain with the sword, or whether, shut up in a shameful chest, where the maid, conscious of her mistress's sin, has stowed you away, you touch your crouching head with your knees? Has not the husband of the erring matron a just power over both? Over the seducer a still juster? Yet she

See note on Sat. i. 4. 123. That Horace could claim equestrian rank, and was even a "potential senator," is maintained by Lily Ross Taylor in an article on "Horace's Equestrian Career" in A.J.P. xlv. (1925) pp. 161 ff. So, too, Haight, Horace, etc. p. 38.

<sup>e</sup> The word auctoratus is technical, being applicable to one who sold himself as a gladiator.

HORACE

non habitu mutave loco peccatve<sup>1</sup> superne, cum te formidet mulier neque credat amanti. 65
ibis sub furcam prudens, dominoque furenti
committes rem omnem et vitam et cum corpore famam.

“Evasti : credo, metues doctusque cavebis ;
quaeres,<sup>2</sup> quando iterum paveas iterumque perire possis, o totiens servus ! quae belua ruptis, 70
cum semel effugit, reddit se prava catenis ?

“non sum moechus,” ais : neque ego, hercule, fur, ubi vasa<sup>3</sup>

praetereo sapiens argentea. tolle periculum :
iam vaga prosiliet frenis Natura remotis.
tune mihi dominus, rerum imperiis hominumque 75
tot tantisque minor, quem ter vindicta quaterque imposita haud umquam misera formidine privet ?
adde super<sup>4</sup> dictis quod non levius valeat : nam
sive vicarius est, qui servo paret, uti<sup>5</sup> mos vester ait, seu conservus, tibi quid<sup>6</sup> sum ego ? nempe tu, mihi qui imperitas, alii<sup>7</sup> servis miser atque 81 duceris ut nervis alienis mobile lignum.

“Quisnam igitur liber? sapiens, sibi qui<sup>8</sup> imperiosus, quem neque pauperies neque mors neque vincula terrent, responsare cupidinibus, contemnere honores 85

fortis, et in se ipso totus,<sup>9</sup> teres atque rotundus,

<sup>1</sup> peccatque, II.                      <sup>2</sup> quaeres El: quaeris, II.

<sup>3</sup> visa V.      <sup>4</sup> supra, II.      <sup>5</sup> uti | ut est, II.

<sup>6</sup> quid Goth.: quod MSS. <sup>7</sup> aliis, II.

<sup>8</sup> sibi qui l, Bentley : sibique V, MSS.

<sup>9</sup> Bentley first punctuated after totus.

<sup>a</sup> As the man had done, ll. 53, 54.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. like an unbridled horse.

<sup>c</sup> The vindicta is the rod used in the formal manumission of a slave in the presence of the praetor.

does not change either garb or position,<sup>a</sup> and she is not the chief sinner, since she is in dread of you and does not trust her lover. You with eyes open will pass under the yoke, and hand over to a furious master your fortune, your life, your person and repute.

<sup>68</sup> Suppose you have escaped: then, I take it, you will be afraid and cautious after your lesson. No, you will seek occasion so as again to be in terror, again to face ruin, O you slave many times over! But what beast, having once burst its bonds and escaped, perversely returns to them again? "I am no adulterer," you say. And, in faith, I am no thief either, when I wisely pass by your silver plate. Take away the risk, set aside restraint, and Nature will spring forward, to roam at will.<sup>b</sup> Are you my master, you, a slave to the dominion of so many men and things—you, whom the praetor's rod, though placed on your head three or four times over,<sup>c</sup> never frees from base terror? And over and above what I have said, add something of no less weight: whether one who obeys a slave is an underslave,<sup>d</sup> as the custom of your class names him, or a fellow-slave, what am I in respect of you? Why, you, who lord it over me, are the wretched slave of another master, and you are moved like a wooden puppet by wires that others pull.

<sup>83</sup> Who then is free? The wise man, who is lord over himself, whom neither poverty nor death nor bonds affright, who bravely defies his passions, and scorns ambition, who in himself is a whole, smoothed and rounded, so that nothing from outside can rest <sup>a</sup> The vicarius was a slave bought by another out of his peculium to help him in his work.

HORACE

externi ne quid valeat per leve morari,
in quem manca ruit semper Fortuna.

Potesne<sup>1</sup>

ex his ut proprium quid noscere? quinque talenta poscit te mulier, vexat foribusque repulsum 90
perfundit gelida, rursus vocat: eripe turpi
colla iugi, 'liber, liber sum,' dic age! non quis:
urget enim dominus mentem non lenis et acris
subiectat lasso stimulos versatque negantem.

Vel cum Pausiaca torpes, insane, tabella, 95
qui peccas minus atque ego, cum Fulvi Rutubaeque aut Pacideiani contento poplite miror proelia rubrica picta aut carbone, velut si re vera pugnent, feriant vitentque moventes<sup>2</sup> arma viri? nequam et<sup>3</sup> cessator Davus; at ipse 100
subtilis veterum iudex et callidus audis.

"Nil ego, si ducor libo fumante: tibi ingens
virtus atque animus cenis responsat opimis?
obsequium ventris mihi perniciosius est cur?
tergo plector enim. qui tu<sup>4</sup> impunitior illa, 105
quae parvo sumi nequeunt, obsonia captas?
nempe inamarescunt epulae sine fine petitae,
illusique pedes vitiosum ferre recusant
corpus. an hic peccat, sub noctem qui puer uvam furtiva mutat strigili? qui praedia vendit, 110

<sup>1</sup> potestne, II.

<sup>3</sup> et omitted, II.

<sup>2</sup> morientes, II.

<sup>4</sup> qui dum φψλ.

---

<sup>a</sup> The wise man of the Stoics is self-contained or independent of externals, αὐταρκής, and is like the perfect sphere of the κόσμος itself (cf. Plato, Tim. 33). In the Protagoras 339 D, Plato also makes use of a figure of Simonides, who calls the truly good man a square, τετράγωνος. So too Aristotle, Rhet. iii. 11.

<sup>b</sup> These are names of gladiators. The last named is 232

on the polished surface, and against whom Fortune in her onset is ever maimed.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>88</sup> Of these traits can you recognize any one as your own? A woman asks of you five talents, worries you, shuts her door in your face, drenches you in cold water, then—calls you back. Rescue your neck from the yoke of shame; come, say, "I am free, am free." You cannot; for you have a master, and no gentle one, plaguing your soul, pricking your weary side with the sharp spur, and driving you on against your will.

<sup>95</sup> Or when, madman, you stand dazed before a picture of Pausias, how do you offend less than I, when I marvel at the contests of Fulvius, Rutuba, or Pacideianus,<sup>b</sup> with their straining legs, drawn in red chalk or charcoal, just as lifelike as if the heroes were really waving their weapons, and fighting, striking, and parrying? Davus is a "rascal and dawdler," but you are called a "fine and expert critic of antiques."

<sup>102</sup> If I'm tempted by a smoking pasty, I'm a good-for-naught: but you—does your heroic virtue and spirit defy rich suppers? Why is it more ruinous for me to obey the stomach's call? My back, to be sure, pays for it. But how do you escape punishment more than I, when you hanker for those dainties which cannot be bought at small cost? Why, that feasting, endlessly indulged, turns to gall, and the feet you've duped refuse to bear up your sickly body. Is the slave guilty, who at fall of night swaps for grapes the flesh-brush he has stolen? Is there borrowed from Lucilius; the other two may be contemporary with Horace. Pictures of gladiators were drawn on walls, and served the purpose of modern posters.

HORACE

nil servile gulae parens habet ? adde, quod idem
non horam tecum esse potes, non otia recte ponere, teque ipsum vitas fugitivus et<sup>1</sup> erro, iam vino quaerens, iam somno fallere Curam ; 114
frustra : nam comes atra premit sequiturque fugacem."

Unde mihi lapidem ?

" Quorsum est opus ? "

Unde sagittas ?

" Aut insanit homo aut versus facit."

Ocius hinc te

ni rapis, accedes opera agro nona Sabino.

<sup>1</sup> ut.

SATIRES, II. vii. 111-118

nothing of the slave about one who sells his estates at his belly's bidding? And again, you cannot yourself bear to be in your own company, you cannot employ your leisure aright, you shun yourself, a runaway and vagabond, seeking now with wine, and now with sleep, to baffle Care.<sup>a</sup> In vain : that black consort dogs and follows your flight.

HOR. Where can I find a stone?

DAVUS. What's it for?

HOR. Or where arrows?

DAVUS. The man's raving, or else verse-making.

HOR. If you don't take yourself off in a jiffy, you'll make the ninth labourer on my Sabine farm.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Odes iii. 1. 40.

VIII

A FIASCO OF A DINNER-PARTY

THE poet describes a dinner at which Maecenas was the guest of honour. Three men of letters were also in the company—Fundanius, Viscus, and Varius. The rest of the guests are undistinguished, and are probably imaginary characters who could not be identified. Porcius, for instance, true to his name, eats like a pig. Balatro is a buffoon, and Nomentanus is one of the traditional characters of satire. Moreover, the host, Nasidienus Rufus, is otherwise quite unknown.

These facts warrant us in acquitting Fundanius (and therefore the author who introduced him) on the charge of extremely bad taste in heaping ridicule on a host whose hospitality had been accepted. Horace, in fact, adopts a principle, which is illustrated in the previous Satire, of securing a certain amount of verisimilitude through the use of known facts, and of drawing on his imagination for the rest of his material. The Satire is directed, partly against the ostentation and vulgarity sometimes displayed by wealth, and partly against the curious and affected erudition of pronounced epicures. In this latter respect it resembles the fourth Satire of this book.

SATIRES, II. VIII.

The party was arranged according to the following plan :

1. Fundanius ; 2. Viscus ; 3. Varius ; 4. Balatro ; 5. Vibidius ; 6. Maecenas ; 7. Nomentanus ; 8. Nasidienus ; 9. Porcius.

Fiske has shown that Lucilius was "the first to establish the traditions of the δείπνον in Latin Satire," and that in this Eighth Satire Horace keeps in fairly close touch with the twentieth book of Lucilius, where a banquet given by the praeco Granius was reported to the satirist by L. Licinius Crassus (Lucilius and Horace, pp. 408 ff.). But, as Lucilius wrote at least five satires on banquets, it is not surprising to find that Lejay (p. 580) regards his fifth book as the chief model followed here by Horace.

VIII.

Ut Nasidieni iuvit te cena beati ?
nam mihi quaerenti convivam dictus here illic
de medio potare die.

“ Sic, ut mihi numquam
in vita fuerit melius.”

Da,<sup>1</sup> si grave non est,
quae prima iratum ventrem pacaverit<sup>2</sup> esca.

“ In primis Lucanus aper ; leni fuit Austro captus, ut aiebat cenae pater ; acria circum
rapula, lactucae, radices, qualia lassum pervellunt stomachum, siser, allec, faecula Coa.
his ut<sup>3</sup> sublatis puer alte cinctus acernam gausape purpureo mensam pertersit, et alter sublegit quodcumque iaceret inutile quodque posset cenantis offendere ; ut Attica virgo cum sacris Cereris, procedit fuscus Hydaspes Caecuba vina ferens, Alcon Chium maris expers.
hic erus : ‘ Albanum, Maecenas, sive Falernum
te magis appositis delectat, habemus utrumque.’ ”

<sup>1</sup> da φψ: dic Bland. (da is the more unusual).

<sup>2</sup> pacaverit C: peccaverit E: placaverit φψ.

<sup>3</sup> ut C Priscian: ubi E.

<sup>a</sup> A dinner-party usually began at the ninth hour (about 3 P.M.), but an ultra-extravagant one might begin even earlier.

<sup>b</sup> The boar with relishes here formed the gustatio, and is another sign of extravagant luxury; cf. Pliny viii. 210, “in principio (cenae) bini ternique mandantur apri.” More commonly it would appear as the pièce de résistance. See note on Sat. ii. 4. 11.

SATIRE VIII

HORACE. How did you like your dinner with the rich Nasidienus? Yesterday, when I tried to get you as my own guest, I was told you had been dining there since midday.<sup>a</sup>

FUNDANIUS. So much so that never in my life did I have a better time.

HOR. Tell me, if you don't mind, what was the first dish to appease an angry appetite?

FUN. First there was a wild boar.<sup>b</sup> It was caught when a gentle south wind was blowing, as the father of the feast kept telling us. Around it were pungent turnips, lettuces, radishes—such things as whet a jaded appetite—skirret, fish-pickle, and Coan lees. When these were removed, a high-girt slave with purple napkin wiped well the maple-wood table, while a second swept up the scraps and anything that could offend the guests. Then, like an Attic maid<sup>c</sup> bearing Ceres' sacred emblems, there came forward dusky Hydaspes with Caecuban wine, and Alcon with Chian, unmixed with brine.<sup>d</sup> Then said our host: "If Alban is more to your taste, Maecenas, or Falernian, we have both."

<sup>c</sup> i.e. like a κανηφόρος in the rites of Demeter; cf. Sat. i. 3. 9.

<sup>d</sup> The Caecuban was one of the finest Italian, as Chian was one of the best Greek, wines. The host's Chian being very good, he did not do what was often done—add sea-water to give it a tang. Columella (xii. 21. 37) gives directions as to the proportions to be used. The phrase maris experts corresponds to οὐ τεθαλαττωμένον in Athenaeus i. p. 32.

HORACE

Divitias miseras ! sed quis cenantibus una,
Fundani, pulchre fuerit tibi, nosse laboro.

“ Summus ego et prope<sup>1</sup> me Viscus Thurinus infra,
si memini, Varius ; cum Servilio Balatrone Vibidius, quos<sup>2</sup> Maecenas adduxerat umbras.
Nomentanus erat super ipsum, Porcius infra, ridiculus totas semel<sup>3</sup> absorbere placentas ;
Nomentanus ad hoc, qui, si quid forte lateret,
indice monstraret digito : nam cetera turba,
nos, inquam, cenamus avis, conchyliis, piscis,
longe dissimilem noto celantia sucum ;
ut vel continuo patuit, cum passeris atque
ingustata mihi porrexerat ilia rhombi.
post hoc me docuit melimela rubere minorem ad lunam delecta. quid hoc intersit ab ipso audieris melius.

“ Tum Vibidius Balatroni :
‘ nos nisi damnose bibimus, moriemur inulti,’ et calices poscit maiores. vertere pallor tum parochi faciem nil sic metuentis ut acris potores, vel quod maledicunt liberior vel fervida quod subtile exsurdant vina palatum.
invertunt Allifanis vinaria tota Vibidius Balatroque, secutis omnibus ; imi<sup>4</sup>
convivae lecti nihilum nocuere lagoenis.

<sup>1</sup> pro V.      <sup>2</sup> quas Goth.      <sup>3</sup> simul E.      <sup>4</sup> imis C, I

<sup>a</sup> The umbræ were uninvited guests who came with a man of high station.

<sup>b</sup> The cetera turba are the uninitiated guests as contrasted with the knowing Nomentanus. The subject of porrexerat is not the host, as commonly supposed, but Nomentanus who is doing the work assigned him. Palmer takes ingustata to mean “untasted,” implying that the odour was enough

HOR. O the misery of wealth! But who, Fundanius, were those at dinner, with whom you had so fine a time? I am eager to know.

FUN. Myself at the top, then next to me Viscus of Thurii, and below, if I remember, Varius. Then Vibidius and Servilius Balatro, the "shades" <sup>a</sup> that Maecenas had brought with him. Above our host was Nomentanus; below him, Porcius, who made us laugh by swallowing whole cheese-cakes at a mouthful. Nomentanus was there to see that if anything perchance escaped our notice, he might point it out with his forefinger; for the rest of the folk <sup>b</sup>—we, I mean—eat fowl, oysters, and fish, which had a flavour far different from any we knew, as, for instance, was made clear at once, after he had handed me the liyers of a plaice and a turbot, a dish I had never tasted before. After this he informed me that the honey-apples were red because picked in the light of a waning moon. What difference that makes you would learn better from himself.

<sup>23</sup> Then said Vibidius to Balatro: "Unless we drink him bankrupt, we shall die unavenged," and he calls for larger cups. Then did paleness overspread the face of the host, who dreaded nothing so much as hard drinkers, either because they chaff one too freely or because fiery wines dull the delicate palate. Vibidius and Balatro tilt whole decanters of wine into Allifan goblets.<sup>c</sup> All followed suit, save the guests on the lowest couch, who did no harm to the flagons.<sup>d</sup> to betray the nature of the food, but the point lies, not in the badness, but in the novelty, of the dishes.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. large cups made at Allifae in Samnium.

<sup>d</sup> Porcius and Nomentanus would, of course, do nothing to offend their host. They therefore "spared the bottle."

HORACE

“ Adfertur squillas inter murena natantis in patina porrecta. sub hoc erus, ‘ haec grvida,’
inquit,

‘ capta est, deterior post partum carne futura.
his mixtum ius est : oleo, quod prima Venafri 45
pressit cella ; garo de sucis piscis Hiberi ;
vino quinquenni, verum citra mare nato, dum coquitur (cocto Chium sic convenit, ut non hoc magis ullum aliud) ; pipere albo, non sine aceto, quod Methymnaeam vitio mutaverit<sup>1</sup> uvam. 50
erucas viridis, inulas ego primus amaras monstravi incoquere ; illutos Curtillus echinos, ut melius muria quod<sup>2</sup> testa marina remittat.’<sup>3</sup>

“ Interea suspensa gravis aulaea ruinas
in patinam fecere, trahentia pulveris atri 55
quantum non Aquilo Campanis excitat agris.
nos maius veriti, postquam nihil esse pericli sensimus, erigimur. Rufus posito capite, ut si filius immaturus obisset, flere. quis esset
finis, ni sapiens sic Nomentanus amicum 60
tolleret : ‘ heu, Fortuna, quis est crudelior in nos
te deus ? ut semper gaudes illudere rebus humanis ! ’ Varius mappa compescere risum vix poterat. Balatro, suspendens omnia naso, ‘ haec est condicio vivendi,’ aiebat, ‘ eoque 65
responsura tuo numquam est par fama labori.
tene, ut ego accipiar laute, torquerier omni sollicitudine districtum, ne panis adustus, ne male conditum ius apponatur, ut omnes

<sup>1</sup> motaverit, I.

<sup>2</sup> quod MSS. : quo V : quam Bentley.

<sup>3</sup> remittas E : remittit C.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Italian, not Greek.

<sup>42</sup> Then is brought in a lamprey, outstretched on a platter, with shrimps swimming all round it. Upon this the master: "This," said he, "was caught before spawning; if taken later, its flesh would have been poorer. The ingredients of the sauce are these: oil from Venafrum of the first pressing, roe from the juices of the Spanish mackerel, wine five years old, but produced this side of the sea,<sup>a</sup> poured in while it is on the boil—after boiling, Chian suits better than anything else—white pepper, and vinegar made from the fermenting of Lesbian vintage. I was the first to point out that one should boil in the sauce green rockets and bitter elecampane; Curtillus would use sea-urchins, unwashed, inasmuch as the yield of the sea-shellfish itself is better than a briny pickle."

<sup>54</sup> Meantime the canopy<sup>b</sup> spread above came down in mighty ruin upon the platter, trailing more black dust than the North-wind raises on Campanian plains. We feared a worse disaster, but finding there was no danger recover ourselves. Rufus drooped his head and wept as if his son had fallen by an untimely fate. What would have been the end, had not Nomentanus, the philosopher, thus rallied his friend: "Ah, Fortune, what god is more cruel toward us than thou! How thou dost ever delight to make sport of the life of man!" Varius could scarce smother a laugh with his napkin. Balatro, who sneers at everything, said: "These are the terms of life, and therefore the meed of fame will never equal your labour. To think that, in order that I may have lavish entertainment, you are to be racked and tortured with every anxiety, lest the bread be burned, lest sauce be served ill-seasoned, that all

<sup>b</sup> The aulaea were hangings used to decorate the walls.

HORACE

praecincti recte pueri<sup>1</sup> comptique ministrent ! 70
 adde hos praeterea casus, aulaea ruant si,
 ut modo ; si patinam pede lapsus frangat agaso.
 sed convivoris, uti ducis, ingenium res
 adversae nudare solent, celare secundae.
 Nasidienus ad haec : ‘ tibi di quaecumque preceris<sup>2</sup> 75
 commoda dent ! ita vir bonus es convivaque comis ;
 et soleas poscit. tum in lecto quoque videres stridere secreta divisos aure susurros.”

Nullos his mallet ludos spectasse ; sed illa
 redde, age, quae deinceps risisti.

“ Vibidius dum 80

quaerit de pueris num sit quoque fracta lagoena, quod sibi poscenti non dentur<sup>3</sup> pocula, dumque
 ridetur fictis rerum Balatrone secundo, Nasidiene, redis mutatae frontis, ut arte emendaturus fortunam. deinde secuti 85
 mazonomo pueri magno discerpta ferentes
 membra gruis sparsi sale multo non sine farre, pinguibus et ficis pastum iecur anseris albae,<sup>4</sup> et leporum avolsos, ut multo suavius, armos, quam si cum lumbis quis edit.<sup>5</sup> tum<sup>6</sup> pectore adusto 90
 vidimus et merulas poni et sine clune palumbes, suavis res, si non causas narraret earum et naturas dominus : quem nos sic fugimusulti, ut nihil omnino gustaremus, velut illis
 Canidia adflasset peior serpentibus Afris.<sup>7</sup>” 95

<sup>1</sup> pueri recte C Goth.

<sup>2</sup> precaris E Goth.

<sup>3</sup> dentur Cφ Bentley : dantur Eψ.

<sup>4</sup> albae V : albi MSS.

<sup>5</sup> edat Priscian.

<sup>6</sup> cum, I.

<sup>7</sup> Afris E Goth. : atris C, II, Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> Their light slippers were removed when the guests took their places ; to call for them was to indicate a wish to leave the dining-room.

your slaves may be properly attired and neat for waiting ! Then, too, these risks besides—the canopy falling, as it did just now, or a numskull stumbling and breaking a dish ! But one who entertains is like a general : mishaps oft reveal his genius, smooth going hides it.” To this replies Nasidienus : “ Heaven grant you every blessing you crave, so kind a man are you, so civil a guest ! ” and calls for his slippers.<sup>a</sup> Then on each couch you might note the buzz of whispers in secret ears exchanged.<sup>b</sup>

HOR. No play would I have rather seen ; but pray tell me, what did you find to laugh at next ?

RUN. While Vibidius is asking the servants whether the flagon also was broken, since cups were not brought him when called for, and while we were laughing at pretended jests, Balatro egging us on, back you come, Nasidienus, with altered brow, as if bent on mending misfortune by art. Then follow servants, bearing on a huge charger the limbs of a crane sprinkled with much salt and meal, and the liver of a white goose fattened on rich figs, and hares’ limbs torn off, as being more dainty than if eaten with the loins. Then we saw blackbirds served with the breast burnt, and pigeons without the rumps—real dainties, did not our host unfold their laws and properties.<sup>c</sup> But off we ran, taking our revenge on him by tasting nothing at all, as though the things were blasted with Canidia’s<sup>d</sup> breath, more deadly than African serpents.

<sup>b</sup> The remarkable accumulation of sibilants in l. 78 imitates the whispering.

<sup>c</sup> Nasidienus discourses upon the dishes with all the seriousness of a philosopher lecturing de rerum natura.

<sup>d</sup> For Canidia see Sat. i. 8. 24.

EPISTLES

I

TO MAECENAS

THE First Epistle, which serves as an introduction to the First Book, and is addressed to the poet's patron, Maecenas, professes to explain why Horace has given up the writing of lyric poetry. He is now too old for such folly, and his mind has turned to another field.

"Why," he asks, "should you wish the gladiator, who has earned his discharge, to return to his former training-school? A warning voice within bids me loose the old steed before he stumble at the end of his course. And so I give up my verses with other toys, and turn all my thoughts to philosophy, following no special school but letting myself be borne along as the breeze may set, now behaving as a true Stoic, being all for action, and now relapsing into the passiveness of a Cyrenaic (1-19).

"With impatience do I await the day when I may devote myself to the serious problems of life; meanwhile I must guide and comfort myself with what little knowledge I possess. A cure for all diseases of the soul may be found in the charms and spells of philosophy, if the patient will but submit to treatment (20-40).

"The first step in virtue and wisdom is to eschew

248

EPISTLES, I. 1.

vice and folly. Men are anxious to avoid poverty and ought to be quite as eager to escape from evil desires, especially as the prize offered is so much greater (41-51).

“ True, the world takes a different view, but the children who sing ‘ You’ll be king, if you do right ’ should teach us how much better than riches is the power to stand erect and free and to fling defiance at Fortune (52-69).

“ If I were asked why I do not go along with the world and share its opinions, I should recall the fable of the fox declining the lion’s invitation to enter his den, because the footprints point in only one direction. The man who once gives in to popular opinion becomes the victim of a hydra. Cutting off one head does no good. Men are capricious, and even the same man changes his views from hour to hour (70-93).

“ I am as bad as others, but though you are quick to notice some carelessness in my dress or appearance, you fail to observe my graver inconsistencies of life and thought (94-105).

“ In short, the Stoics are right : only the sage can be perfect, and even he may suffer from a cold ! ”

ÉPISTULARUM

LIBER PRIMUS

I.

Prima dicte mihi, summa dicende Camena,
spectatum satis et donatum iam rude quaeris,
Maecenas, iterum antiquo me includere ludo.
non eadem est aetas, non mens. Veianius armis Herculis ad postem fixis latet abditus agro, 5
ne populum extrema totiens exoret<sup>1</sup> harena.
est mihi purgatam crebro qui personet aurem : “ solve senescentem mature sanus equum, ne peccet ad extremum ridendus et ilia ducat.”

Nunc itaque et versus et cetera ludicra pono ; 10 quid verum atque decens curo et rogo et omnis in hoc sum ;
condo et compono quae mox depromere possim.
ac ne forte roges, quo me duce, quo lare tuter :

<sup>1</sup> exornet φψδ.

<sup>a</sup> The first Satire, the first Epode, and the first Ode are all addressed to Maecenas.

<sup>b</sup> Horace compares himself to an old gladiator, who has often won approval, and received the wooden foil which was a symbol of discharge from the school of gladiators.

<sup>c</sup> The defeated combatant would beg for his life. Veianius, after his discharge, yielded to no inducements to return to the arena.

EPISTLES

BOOK I

EPISTLE I

You, of whom my earliest Muse has told,<sup>a</sup> of whom my last shall tell—you Maecenas, seek to shut me up again in my old school, though well tested in the fray, and already presented with the foil.<sup>b</sup> My years, my mind, are not the same. Veianius hangs up his arms at Hercules' door, then lies hidden in the country, that he may not have to plead with the crowd again and again from the arena's edge.<sup>c</sup> Some one there is who is always dinning in my well-rinsed ear: "Be wise in time, and turn loose the ageing horse, lest at the last he stumble amid jeers and burst his wind."

<sup>10</sup> So now I lay aside my verses and all other toys. What is right and seemly is my study and pursuit, and to that am I wholly given. I am putting by and setting in order the stores on which I may some day draw. Do you ask, perchance, who is my chief, in what home I take shelter? I am not bound over<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Horace, still using terms applicable to a gladiator, who took an oath to the master of his training-school, is speaking of the acceptance of the formula of some school of philosophy.

HORACE

nullius addictus<sup>1</sup> iurare in verba magistri, quo me cumque rapit tempestas, deferor hospes. 15
 nunc agilis fio et mersor civilibus undis,
 virtutis verae custos rigidusque satelles ;
 nunc in Aristippi furtim praecepta relabor et<sup>2</sup> mihi res, non me rebus, subiungere conor.

Ut nox longa quibus mentitur amica, diesque 20
 longa videtur opus debentibus, ut piger annus pupillis, quos dura premit custodia matrum ;
 sic mihi tarda fluunt ingrataque tempora, quae spem
 consiliumque morantur agendi naviter id quod aequae pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aequae, 25
 aequae neglectum pueris senibusque nocebit.
 restat ut his ego me ipse regam solerque elementis.
 non possis oculo<sup>3</sup> quantum contendere Lynceus,
 non tamen idcirco contemnas lippus inungui ;
 nec quia desperes invicti membra Glyconis,<sup>4</sup> 30
 nodosa corpus nolis prohibere cheragra.
 est quadam<sup>5</sup> prodire tenus, si non datur ultra.

Fervet avaritia miseroque cupidine pectus :
 sunt verba et voces, quibus hunc lenire dolorem
 possis et magnam morbi deponere partem. 35 laudis amore tumes ; sunt certa piacula, quae te ter pure lecto poterunt recreare libello.

<sup>1</sup> addictus, II: adductus aEM, I, yet addictus is surely correct.

<sup>2</sup> ac.

<sup>3</sup> oculos.

<sup>4</sup> Milonis known to Acron.

<sup>5</sup> quodam, II.

<sup>a</sup> By agilis Horace translates πρακτικός, and civilibus = πολιτικοῖς ; the Stoics insisted on an active participation in public life.

<sup>b</sup> Aristippus founded the Cyrenaic school, which taught that a man should control circumstances, not be controlled by them.

<sup>c</sup> As he has not yet been able to take up philosophy

EPISTLES, I. 1. 14-37

to swear as any master dictates ; wherever the storm drives me, I turn in for comfort. Now I become all action,<sup>a</sup> and plunge into the tide of civil life, stern champion and follower of true Virtue ; now I slip back stealthily into the rules of Aristippus, and would bend the world to myself, not myself to the world.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>20</sup> As the night seems long for one whose mistress proves false, and the day long for 'those who work for hire ; as the year lags for wards held in check by their mother's strict guardianship : so slow and thankless flow for me the hours which defer my hope and purpose of setting myself vigorously to that task which profits alike the poor, alike the rich, but, if neglected, will be harmful alike to young and to old. What remains is for me to guide and solace myself with these poor rudiments.<sup>c</sup> You may not be able, with your eyes, to see as far as Lynceus, yet you would not on that account scorn to anoint them, if sore. Nor, because you may not hope for unconquered Glycon's strength of limb, would you decline to keep your body free from the gnarls of gout. It is worth while to take some steps forward, though we may not go still further.

<sup>23</sup> Is your bosom fevered with avarice and sordid covetousness ? There are spells and sayings<sup>d</sup> whereby you may soothe the pain and cast much of the malady aside. Are you swelling with ambition ? There are fixed charms which can fashion you anew, if with cleansing rites you read the booklet thrice. The vigorously, his only comfort is to make the most of the little knowledge of it that he had.

<sup>e</sup> The lessons of philosophy are compared to the magic formulas which were used in the medical art of ancient days.

HORACE

invidus, iracundus, iners, vinosus, amator,
 nemo adeo ferus est, ut non mitescere possit,
 si modo culturae patientem commodet aurem. 40

Virtus est vitium fugere et sapientia prima stultitia caruisse. vides, quae maxima credis esse mala, exiguum censum turpemque repulsam,<sup>1</sup> quanto devites animi capitisque labore ;
 impiger extremos curris mercator ad Indos, 45
 per mare pauperiem fugiens, per saxa, per ignis :
 ne cures ea, quae stulte miraris et optas,
 discere<sup>2</sup> et audire et meliori credere non vis ?
 quis circum pagos et circum compita pugnax
 magna coronari contemnat Olympia, cui spes, 50
 cui sit condicio dulcis sine pulvere palmae ?

Vilius argentum est auro, virtutibus aurum.
 "o-cives, cives, quaerenda pecunia primum est ;
 virtus post nummos !" haec Ianus summus ab imo
 prodocet, haec recinunt iuvenes dictata senesque, 55
 laevo suspensi loculos tabulamque lacerto.
 est animus tibi, sunt mores, est lingua<sup>3</sup> fidesque, sed<sup>4</sup> quadringentis sex septem milia desunt<sup>5</sup> ;<sup>6</sup>
 plebs eris. at pueri ludentes, "rex eris," aiunt,
 "si recte facies." hic murus aeneus esto, 60
 nil conscire sibi, nulla pallescere culpa.

<sup>1</sup> laborem Rδπ.

<sup>2</sup> dicere, II.

<sup>3</sup> est lingua E: et lingua other MSS.

<sup>4</sup> si.

<sup>5</sup> desint φψλλ.

<sup>6</sup> The order of ll. 57, 58 thus in E, reversed in other MSS. Housman would place l. 56 after l. 59.

<sup>a</sup> For the thought cf. Sat. i. 1. 30 ; i. 4. 29 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 3. 18. The arch of Janus represents the banking world of Rome.

<sup>c</sup> Repeated from Sat. i. 6. 74. In this respect the old still behave as school-boys.

<sup>d</sup> Enrolment in the equites implied a fortune of 400,000 sesterces.

EPISTLES, I. I. 38-61

slave to envy, anger, sloth, wine, lewdness—no one is so savage that he cannot be tamed, if only he lend to treatment a patient ear.

<sup>41</sup> To flee vice is the beginning of virtue, and to have got rid of folly is the beginning of wisdom. You see with what anxious thought and peril of life you strive to avoid those ills you deem the greatest, a slender fortune and the shame of failure at the polls. Ardent trader that you are, you rush to the furthest Indies, fleeing poverty through sea, through rocks, through flame <sup>a</sup>: but that you may cease to care for the things which you foolishly admire and crave, will you not learn and listen and trust one wiser than yourself? What wrestler in the village games and at the cross-ways would scorn being crowned at the great Olympic games, who had the hope, who had the surety of victory's palm without the dust?

<sup>52</sup> Of less worth than gold is silver, than virtue gold. "O citizens, citizens, money you first must seek; virtue after pelf." This rule the Janus arcade proclaims from top to bottom <sup>b</sup>; this is the lesson the old as well as the young are singing, "with slate and satchel slung over the left arm." <sup>c</sup> You have sense, you have morals, eloquence and honour, but there are six or seven thousands short of the four hundred <sup>d</sup>; you will be in the crowd. Yet boys at play cry; "You'll be king, if you do right." <sup>e</sup> Be this our wall of bronze, to have no guilt at heart, no wrongdoing to turn us pale.

* The Scholiast gives the verse, which children sang in their game, thus:

rex erit qui recte faciet; quí non faciet, nón erit.

There is a pun in rex and recte.

HORACE

Roscia, dic sodes, melior lex an puerorum est
 nenia, quae regnum recte facientibus offert,
 et maribus Curiis et decantata Camillis ?
 isne tibi melius suadet, qui " rem facias, rem, 65
 si possis, recte, si non, quocumque modo, rem," ut propius spectes lacrimosa poemata Pupi,
 an qui Fortunae te responsare superbae
 liberum et erectum praesens hortatur et aptat<sup>1</sup> ?
 Quod si me populus Romanus forte roget, cur 70
 non ut porticibus sic iudiciis fruar isdem,<sup>2</sup> nec<sup>3</sup> sequar aut<sup>4</sup> fugiam quae<sup>5</sup> diligit ipse vel odit, olim quod volpes aegroto cauta leoni respondit, referam : " quia me vestigia terrent, omnia te adversum spectantia, nulla retrorsum." 75
 belua multorum es capitum. nam quid sequar aut quem ?
 pars hominum gestit conducere publica ; sunt qui frustis<sup>6</sup> et pomis viduas venentur avaras excipiantque senes, quos in vivaria mittant ;
 multis occulto crescit res faenore.
 Verum 80
 esto aliis alios rebus studiisque teneri :
 idem eadem possunt horam durare probantes ?
 " nullus in orbe<sup>7</sup> sinus Bais praelucet amoenis," si dixit dives, lacus et mare sentit amorem
 festinantis eri ; cui si vitiosa libido 85

<sup>1</sup> optat Goth.                      <sup>2</sup> idem *ER*π.
<sup>3</sup> ne E.                      <sup>4</sup> et or ac, II.                      <sup>5</sup> quem *R*π.
<sup>6</sup> crustis.                      <sup>7</sup> urbe φψδ.

<sup>a</sup> See Sat. i. 6. 40 and note.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 4. 134, where see note.

<sup>c</sup> See the subject of Sat. ii. 5.

<sup>d</sup> For excipiant cf. excipere aprum, Odes iii. 12. 12. Wild animals were sometimes caught and turned into preserves (Pliny viii. 52. 211). Cf. Sat. ii. 5. 44.

<sup>62</sup> Tell me, pray, which is better, the Roscian law <sup>a</sup> or the children's jingle which offers a kingdom to those who "do right" — a jingle once trolled by the manly Curii and Camilli? Does he advise you better, who bids you "make money, money by fair means if you can, if not, by any means money," and all that you may have a nearer view of the doleful plays of Pupius; or he who, an ever present help, urges and fits you to stand free and erect, and defy scornful Fortune?

<sup>70</sup> But if the people of Rome should ask me, perchance, why I do not use the same judgements even as I walk in the same colonnades <sup>b</sup> as they, why I do not follow or eschew what they love or hate, I should reply as once upon a time the prudent fox made answer to the sick lion: "Because those foot-prints frighten me; they all lead toward your den, and none lead back." You are a many-headed monster-thing. For what am I to follow or whom? Some men rejoice to farm state-revenues; some with titbits and fruits hunt miserly widows, <sup>c</sup> and net old men to stock their preserves; <sup>d</sup> with many their money grows with interest unobserved. <sup>e</sup>

But let it be that men are swayed by different aims and hobbies; can the same persons persist for one hour in liking the same things? "No bay in the world outshines lovely Baiae." If so the rich man has said, lake and sea suffer from the eager owner's fancy; but if a morbid whim has given him the <sup>f</sup> Money grows by the "unobserved" accumulation of interest, just as a tree grows by the unobserved lapse of time, "crescit occulto velut arbor aevo," Odes i. 12. 45. The idea that occulto here means "secret," in the sense of "unlawful," is absurd.

HORACE

fecerit auspiciū, " crās ferramenta Teanum
tolletis, fabri ! " lectus genialis in aula est :
nil ait esse prius, melius nil caelibe vita ;
si non est, iurat bene solis esse maritis.
quo teneam voltus mutantem Protea nodo ? 90
quid pauper ? ride : mutat cenacula, lectos, balnea, tonsores, conducto navigio aequē
nauseat ac locuples, quem ducit priva triremis.

Si curatus inaequali tonsore capillos
occurri,<sup>1</sup> rides ; si forte subucula pexae 95
trita subest tunicae, vel si toga dissidet impar, rides : quid, mea cum pugnat sententia secum,<sup>2</sup>
quod petiit spernit, repetit quod nuper omisit,
aestuat et vitae disconvenit ordine toto,
diruit, aedificat, mutat quadrata rotundis ? 100
insanire putas<sup>3</sup> sollemnia me neque rides, nec medici credis nec curatoris egere
a praetore dati, rerum tutela mearum cum sis et prave sectum stomacheris ob unguem
de te pendentis, te respicientis amici. 105

Ad summam : sapiens uno minor est Iove, dives,
liber, honoratus, pulcher, rex denique regum,
praecipue sanus, nisi cum pituita molesta est.

<sup>1</sup> occurrit or occurro.

<sup>2</sup> mecum Rδπ Goth.

<sup>3</sup> putas, I Porph. : putat, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> The usual way to consult the auspices would be to observe the flight of birds and other means of augury, but the rich man's own caprice is a sufficient guide for him. Cf. "an sua cuique deus fit dira cupido?" (Virgil, Aen. ix. 185). Teanum was an inland town.

EPISTLES, I. 1. 86-108

omen,<sup>a</sup> "My lads," he cries, "to-morrow you'll carry your tools to Teanum." Is the bed of his Genius<sup>b</sup> in his hall? "Nothing," he says, "is finer or better than a single life." If it is not, he swears that only the married are well off. With what knot can I hold this face-changing Proteus? What of the poor man? Have your laugh! He changes his garret, his bed, his barber. He hires a boat and gets just as sick as the rich man who sails in his private yacht.

<sup>94</sup> If, when some uneven barber has cropped my hair, I come your way, you laugh; if haply I have a tattered shirt beneath a new tunic, or if my gown sits badly and askew, you laugh. What, when my judgement is at strife with itself, scorns what it craved, asks again for what it lately cast aside; when it shifts like a tide, and in the whole system of life is out of joint, pulling down, building up, and changing square to round? You think my madness is the usual thing, and neither laugh at me nor deem that I need a physician or a guardian assigned by the court,<sup>c</sup> though you are keeper of my fortunes, and flare up at an ill-pared nail of the friend who hangs upon you and looks to you in all.

<sup>106</sup> To sum up<sup>d</sup>: the wise man is less than Jove alone. He is rich, free, honoured, beautiful, nay a king of kings; above all, sound<sup>e</sup>—save when troubled by the "flu"!

<sup>b</sup> The marriage-bed was dedicated to the Genius of the family.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 3. 217.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 3. 124 and ff.

<sup>e</sup> Horace plays upon the double sense of sanus, "sound" and "sane."

II

TO LOLLIUS MAXIMUS

THE poem is addressed to a young man who is studying rhetoric in Rome, and who, if he is the same Lollius as is addressed in Epistle i. 18, had already served in the Cantabrian war of 25-24 B.C. Horace seeks to interest him in moral philosophy through Homer, whom the ancients perused, as we are told to read the Apocrypha, "for examples of life and instruction of manners."

The poet has been reading Homer afresh while in Praeneste, and pronounces him a wiser teacher than all the philosophers. The Iliad pictures for us the follies of princes and the sufferings of the people. The Odyssey shows us the value of courage and self-control. Ulysses is the truly wise man, in contrast with whom the worthless suitors of Penelope or the idle youth at the court of Alcinous are but cyphers, the undistinguished mass of mankind, mere consumers of earth's products (1-31).

And such cyphers are we. Surely it is time for us to wake up to the importance of right living and devote ourselves to study and virtue. To put off the day of reform is to be like the clown who waits for the stream to run dry (32-43).

Men are eager to become rich, but riches will not

EPISTLES, I. II.

bring health, either of body or of mind. We must clean the inside of the platter and make our hearts sound (44-54).

And so, in a Polonius strain, Horace gives a variety of moral maxims. In this quest of wisdom, the middle-aged poet must pursue his own quiet way, and the youthful Lollius must not expect him to be either too indifferent or too enthusiastic (55-71).

II.

Troiani belli scriptorem, Maxime Lolli, dum tu declamas Romae, Praeneste relegi ;
qui quid sit pulchrum, quid turpe, quid utile, quid non,
planius<sup>1</sup> ac melius Chrysippo et Crantore dicit.
cur ita crediderim, nisi quid te distinet,<sup>2</sup> audi. 5

Fabula, qua Paridis propter narratur amorem Graecia barbariae lento collisa duello, stultorum regum et populorum continet aestus.<sup>3</sup> Antenor censet belli<sup>4</sup> praecidere causam :
quid<sup>5</sup> Paris ? ut salvus regnet vivatque beatus 10
cogi posse negat. Nestor componere litis inter Peliden festinat et inter Atriden ;
hunc<sup>6</sup> amor, ira quidem communiter urit utrumque.
quidquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi.
seditione, dolis, scelere atque libidine et ira 15
Iliacos intra muros peccatur et extra.

Rursus, quid virtus et quid sapientia possit,
utile proposuit nobis exemplar Ulixen,

<sup>1</sup> plenius, II.

<sup>2</sup> distinet, II E<sup>1</sup> : destinet a : detinet E<sup>2</sup>M.

<sup>3</sup> aestum V, II.

<sup>4</sup> belli censet E.

<sup>5</sup> quod, II : hence Bentley quod Paris, ut.

<sup>6</sup> nunc.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. study rhetoric under a rhetor, or professor who made his pupils prepare speeches on the themes given them and often taken from history or literature ; cf. Juvenal vii. 150 ; x. 166.

EPISTLE II

While you, Lollius Maximus, declaim <sup>a</sup> at Rome, I have been reading afresh at Praeneste the writer of the Trojan War; who tells us what is fair, what is foul, what is helpful, what not, more plainly and better than Chrysippus or Crantor. Why I have come to think so, let me tell you, unless there is something else to take your attention.

<sup>6</sup> The story in which it is told how, because of Paris's love Greece clashed in tedious war with a foreign land, embraces the passions of foolish kings and peoples. Antenor moves to cut away the cause of the war.<sup>b</sup> What of Paris? To reign in safety and to live in happiness—nothing, he says, can force him.<sup>c</sup> Nestor is eager to settle the strife between the sons of Peleus and of Atreus. Love fires one, but anger both in common. Whatever folly the kings commit, the Achaeans pay the penalty. With faction, craft, crime, lust and wrath, within and without the walls of Troy all goes wrong.

<sup>17</sup> Again, of the power of worth and wisdom he has set before us an instructive pattern in Ulysses,

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Iliad, vii. 350, where Antenor urges that the Trojans restore Helen to the Atridae.

<sup>c</sup> This is, of course, ironical. If we read quod Paris, ut with Bentley, it would go with cogi, so that, without any irony, Paris would say that he could not be forced into doing that, viz. giving up Helen, in order to reign in safety.

HORACE

qui domitor Troiae multorum providus urbes et mores hominum inspexit, latumque per aequor, 20
dum sibi, dum sociis reditum parat, aspera multa
pertulit, adversis rerum immersabilis undis.

Sirenum voces et Circae pocula nosti ;
quae si cum sociis stultus cupidusque bibisset,
sub domina meretrice fuisset turpis et excors, 25
vixisset canis immundus vel amica luto sus.
nos numerus sumus et fruges consumere nati,
sponsi Penelopae nebulones, Alcinoique
in cute curanda plus aequo operata iuventus, cui pulchrum fuit in medios dormire dies et 30
ad strepitum citharae cessatum ducere curam.<sup>1</sup>

Ut iugulent hominem, surgunt de nocte latrones ;
ut te ipsum serves, non expergisceris ? atqui<sup>2</sup> si noles<sup>3</sup> sanus, curres<sup>4</sup> hydropicus ; et ni posces ante diem librum cum lumine, si non 35
intendes animum studiis et rebus honestis, invidia vel amore vigil torquebere. nam cur quae laedunt oculum<sup>5</sup> festinas demere ; si quid<sup>6</sup> est animum, differs curandi tempus in annum ?
dimidium facti qui coepit habet ; sapere aude ; 40
incipere ! qui recte vivendi<sup>7</sup> prorogat horam, rusticus exspectat dum defluat amnis ; at ille
labitur et labetur in omne volubilis aevum.

Quaeritur argentum puerisque beata creandis uxor, et incultae pacantur vomere silvae : 45

<sup>1</sup> curam, I: somnum Eπ Goth. Bentley read cessantem ducere somnum. W. R. Inge suggests cessantem ducere noctem (C.R. 1921, p. 103).

<sup>2</sup> atque, II, V. <sup>3</sup> nolis λλ. <sup>4</sup> cures, II; so Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> oculum E, II: oculos a M Goth. <sup>6</sup> si quod φψλλ.

<sup>7</sup> qui recte vivendi E Goth., Porph.: vivendi qui recte
other MSS.

that tamer of Troy, who looked with discerning eyes upon the cities and manners of many men, and while for self and comrades he strove for a return across the broad seas, many hardships he endured, but could never be o'erwhelmed in the waves of adversity.<sup>a</sup> You know the Sirens' songs and Circe's cups; if, along with his comrades, he had drunk of these in folly and greed, he would have become the shapeless and witless vassal of a harlot mistress—would have lived as an unclean dog or a sow that loves the mire. We are but ciphers, born to consume earth's fruits, Penelope's good-for-naught suitors, young courtiers of Alcinous, unduly busy in keeping their skins sleek, whose pride it was to sleep till midday and to lull care to rest to the sound of the cithern.

<sup>32</sup> To cut men's throats, robbers rise up by night; to save your own life, won't you wake up? Nay, just as, if you won't take up running in health, you'll have to do it when dropsical; so, if you don't call for a book and a light before daybreak, if you don't devote your mind to honourable studies and pursuits, envy or passion will keep you awake in torment. Why indeed are you in a hurry to remove things which hurt the eye, while if aught is eating into your soul, you put off the time for cure till next year? Well begun is half done; dare to be wise; begin! He who puts off the hour of right living is like the bumpkin waiting for the river to run out: yet on it glides, and on it will glide, rolling its flood forever.

<sup>44</sup> We seek money and a rich wife to bear us children; the wild woods, too, are tamed by our <sup>a</sup> This sentence gives a free rendering of the opening lines of the Odyssey.

HORACE

quod satis est cui contingit,<sup>1</sup> nihil amplius optet.
 non domus et fundus, non aeris acervus et auri
 aegroto domini deduxit corpore febris,
 non animo curas ; valeat possessor oportet,
 si comportatis rebus bene cogitat uti. 50
 qui cupit aut metuit, iuvat illum sic domus et res, ut lippum pictae tabulae, fomenta<sup>2</sup> podagram,
 auriculas citharae collecta sorde dolentis.
 sincerum est nisi vas, quodcumque infundis acescit.
 Sperne voluptates ; nocet empta dolore voluptas.
 semper avarus eget ; certum voto pete finem. 56
 invidus alterius macrescit rebus opimis ;
 invidia Siculi non invênere tyranni
 maius tormentum. qui non moderabitur irae,<sup>3</sup> infectum volet esse, dolor quod suaserit et mens,<sup>4</sup> 60
 dum poenas odio per vim festinat inulto.
 ira furor brevis est : animum rege ; qui nisi paret
 imperat ; hunc frenis, hunc tu compesce catena.<sup>5</sup> Fingit equum tenera docilem cervice magister ire viam qua<sup>6</sup> monstret eques ; venaticus, ex quo 65 tempore cervinam pellem latravit in aula, militat in silvis catulus. nunc adbibe puro
 pectore verba puer, nunc te melioribus offer.
 quo semel est imbuta recens, servabit odorem testa diu. quod si cessas aut strenuus anteis, 70
 nec tardum opperior nec praecedentibus insto.

<sup>1</sup> contigit is V<sup>2</sup>.      <sup>2</sup> tomenta Bouhier.      <sup>3</sup> iram, II.

<sup>4</sup> et mens] exmens or amens.

<sup>5</sup> catenis E Goth.

<sup>6</sup> qua E : quam a.

<sup>a</sup> Such as the cruel Dionysius or Phalaris.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. "sapor, quo nova imbuas, durat" (Quintilian, i. 1. 5). Unglazed ware, which Horace doubtless has in mind, is more absorbent than glazed.

plough: but he, to whose lot sufficient falls, should covet nothing more. No house or land, no pile of bronze or gold, has ever freed the owner's sick body of fevers, or his sick mind of cares. The possessor must be sound in health, if he thinks of enjoying the stores he has gathered. To one with fears or cravings, house and fortune give as much pleasure as painted panels to sore eyes, warm wraps to the gout, or citherns to ears that suffer from secreted matter. Unless the vessel is clean, whatever you pour<sup>1</sup> in turns sour.

<sup>55</sup> Scorn pleasures; pleasure bought with pain is harmful. The covetous is ever in want: aim at a fixed limit for your desires. The envious man grows lean when his neighbour waxes fat; than envy Sicilian tyrants<sup>a</sup> invented no worse torture. He who curbs not his anger will wish that undone which vexation and wrath prompted, as he made haste with violence to gratify his unsated hatred. Anger is short-lived madness. Rule your passion, for unless it obeys, it gives commands. Check it with bridle—check it, I pray you, with chains.

<sup>64</sup> While the colt has a tender neck and is able to learn, the groom trains him to go the way his rider directs. The hound that is to hunt does service in the woods from the time that it first barked at a deer-skin in the yard. Now, while still a boy, drink in my words with clean heart, now trust yourself to your betters. The jar will long keep the fragrance of what it was once steeped in when new.<sup>b</sup> But if you lag behind, or with vigour push on ahead, I neither wait for the slow nor press after those who hurry on before.

III

TO JULIUS FLORUS

THE Julius Florus, to whom this Epistle is addressed, and to whom Epistle ii. 2 is later dedicated, was one of a number of young literary men who accompanied Tiberius to the East in 20 B.C., when the prince was sent by Augustus to place Tigranes on the throne of Armenia after the murder of Artaxias. Horace, now forty-five years old, makes kindly inquiries about his younger literary friends, and urges Florus, whatever field of letters he is cultivating, not to neglect philosophy.

III.

Iuli Flore, quibus terrarum militet oris
 Claudius Augusti privignus, scire laboro.
 Thracane<sup>1</sup> vos Hebrusque nivali compede vinctus, an freta vicinas inter currentia turris,<sup>2</sup>
 an pingues Asiae campi collesque morantur? 5 Quid studiosa cohors operum struit? hoc quoque
 curo.
 quis sibi res gestas Augusti scribere sumit?
 bella quis et paces longum diffundit in aevum?
 quid Titius, Romana brevi venturus in ora?
 Pindarici fontis qui non expalluit haustus, 10
 fastidire lacus et rivos ausus apertos.
 ut valet? ut meminit nostri? fidibusne Latinis Thebanos aptare modos studet auspice Musa,
 an tragica desaevit et ampullatur in arte?
 quid mihi Celsus agit? monitus multumque monendus, 15
 privatas ut quaerat opes et tangere vitet

<sup>1</sup> Threcane E.

<sup>2</sup> terras V: terres δ<sup>1</sup>: terris R<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Tiberius Claudius Nero, the later Emperor Tiberius.
<sup>b</sup> The towers of Hero and Leander, at Sestos and Abydos, on either side of the Hellespont.

<sup>c</sup> In lacos et rivos apertos Horace refers to the artificial pools and tanks from which anyone could draw water, as contrasted with the natural springs in far distant hills, which

EPISTLE III

I long to know, Julius Florus, in what regions of the earth Claudius,<sup>a</sup> step-son of Augustus, is now campaigning. Does Thrace stay your steps, and Hebrus, bound in snowy fetters, or the straits that run between neighbouring towers,<sup>b</sup> or Asia's fertile plains and hills?

<sup>6</sup> What works is the learned staff composing? This, too, I want to know. Who takes upon him to record the exploits of Augustus? Who adown distant ages makes known his deeds in war and peace? What of Titius, soon to be on the lips of Romans, who quailed not at draughts of the Pindaric spring, but dared to scorn the open<sup>c</sup> pools and streams? How fares he? How mindful is he of me? Does he essay, under favour of the Muse, to fit Theban measures to the Latin lyre? Or does he storm and swell<sup>d</sup> in the tragic art? What, pray, is Celsus doing? He was warned, and must often be warned to search for home treasures, and to shrink from touching the one could reach only with difficulty. Apart from the metaphor, the contrast is between those Greek writers who could easily be reproduced, and the inimitable Pindar. For the latter idea cf. Odes, iv. 2, "Pindarum quisquis studet aemulari," etc.

<sup>d</sup> The word ampullatur, translating ληκυθίζει, is from ampulla, a flask, the swelling body of which led to the use of the word for bombast. Cf. Ars Poet. 97.

HORACE

scripta Palatinus quaecumque recepit Apollo, ne, si forte suas repetitum venerit olim
 grex avium plumas, moveat cornicula<sup>1</sup> risum furtivis nudata coloribus. ipse quid audes? 20
 quae circumvolitas agilis thyma? non tibi parvum ingenium, non incultum est et<sup>2</sup> turpiter hirtum.
 seu linguam causis acuis seu civica iura respondere<sup>3</sup> paras seu condis amabile carmen, prima feres hederæ victricis præmia. quod si 25
 frigida curarum fomenta relinquere posses, quo te caelestis sapientia duceret, ires.<sup>4</sup>
 hoc opus, hoc studium parvi properemus et ampli,
 si patriæ volumus, si nobis vivere cari.
 Debes hoc etiam rescribere, sit<sup>5</sup> tibi curæ 30
 quantæ conveniat Munatius; an male sarta gratia nequiquam coit et rescinditur, ac vos seu calidus sanguis seu<sup>6</sup> rerum inscitia vexat indomita cervice feros? ubicumque locorum vivitis, indigni fraternum rumpere foedus, 35
 pascitur in vestrum reditum votiva iuvenca.

<sup>1</sup> vulpecula Servius on Aen. xi. 522.

<sup>2</sup> nec φψλλ.

<sup>3</sup> responsare E.

<sup>4</sup> Hitzig would transpose ll. 26, 27 with each other, perhaps correctly.

<sup>5</sup> si δ: hence si tibi curæ est Bentley, Orelli.

<sup>6</sup> seu . . . seu Acron: heu . . . heu MSS.

---

<sup>a</sup> Celsus is urged to depend more upon himself, instead of drawing so freely upon earlier writers, whose works he consulted in the library of the temple of Apollo on the Palatine.

<sup>b</sup> Strictly speaking, the ivy applies only to the poet. For this cf. Odes, i. 1. 29.

writings which Apollo on the Palatine has admitted<sup>a</sup>: lest, if some day perchance the flock of birds come to reclaim their plumage, the poor crow, stripped of his stolen colours, awake laughter. And yourself—what do you venture on? About what beds of thyme are you busily flitting? No small gift is yours: not untilled is the field, or rough-grown and unsightly. Whether you sharpen your tongue for pleading, or essay to give advice on civil law, or build charming verse, you will win the first prize of the victor's ivy.<sup>b</sup> But could you but lay aside your cares—those cold compresses<sup>c</sup>—you would rise to where heavenly wisdom would lead. This task, this pursuit let us speed, small and great alike, if we would live dear to our country, and dear to ourselves.

<sup>30</sup> This, too, when you reply, you must tell me—whether you esteem Munatius as much as you should. Or does your friendship, like a wound ill-stitched, close vainly and tear open once more? Yet, whether hot blood or ignorance of the world drives you both, wild steeds with untamed necks, wherever on earth you are living—you who are too good to break the bond of brotherhood—a votive heifer is fattening against your return.

<sup>a</sup> Horace seems to mean that the cares which weigh upon Florus are like the cold bandages which physicians in his day were prescribing for certain bodily ailments, cf. Suet. Aug. 81. The curae chilled the fire of inspiration, and were therefore far from beneficial, because Florus was continually wrapping himself up in his troubles. Some, however, prefer to take curarum as an objective genitive, so that curarum fomenta means “remedies against cares.”

IV

TO ALBIUS TIBULLUS

ALBIUS TIBULLUS, the elegiac poet, who died the same year as Virgil, 19 B.C., when still quite young, had returned from a campaign in Aquitania in 27 B.C., and then perhaps read for the first time the Satires of Horace. As the first verse of this Epistle refers only to the Satires and not to the Odes, this short letter seems to have been written before 23 B.C., when the Odes (Books i.-iii.) were published.

Tibullus seems to have been of a sensitive and somewhat melancholy disposition, like the English poet, Thomas Gray. Horace here tries to divert him, and concludes with an invitation to visit him, a prosperous Epicurean, at his Sabine farm.

The commonly accepted view that the Albius here addressed by Horace is the poet Tibullus has been rejected by Cruquius, Baehrens and, more recently, by Professor J. P. Postgate (Selections from Tibullus, 1903, p. 179). The identity of Albius and Tibullus is upheld by Professor B. L. Ullman in an article on "Horace and Tibullus" in the American Journal of Philology, xxxiii. (1912) pp. 149 ff., to which Professor Postgate replies briefly in the same volume, pp. 450 ff. Ullman also holds that Tibullus is the Albi filius of Sat. i. 4. 109, written when Tibullus was about sixteen years of age.

IV.

Albi, nostrorum sermonum candide iudex,
 quid nunc te dicam facere in regione Pedana ?
 scribere quod Cassi Parmensis opuscula vincat,
 an tacitum silvas inter reptare salubris, curantem quidquid dignum sapiente bonoque<sup>1</sup> est ? <sup>5</sup> non tu corpus eras sine pectore : di tibi formam, di tibi divitias dederunt<sup>2</sup> artemque fruendi.
 quid voveat dulci nutricula maius alumno, qui<sup>3</sup> sapere et fari possit quae sentiat, et cui gratia, fama, valetudo contingat abunde, 10
 et mundus<sup>4</sup> victus non deficiente crumina ?

Inter spem curamque, timores inter et iras<sup>5</sup>
 omnem crede diem tibi diluxisse supremum.
 grata superveniet, quae non sperabitur hora.
 me pinguem et nitidum bene curata cute vises, 15
 cum ridere voles, Epicuri de<sup>6</sup> grege porcum.

<sup>1</sup> bonumque Rπ.

<sup>2</sup> dederant EM.

<sup>3</sup> qui EV Porph. : quin a, II : qun M.

<sup>4</sup> mundus, I : modus et, II : domus et Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> tumores . . . iram E.

<sup>6</sup> cum E.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Satires. The word Sermones means "talks,"

EPISTLE IV

Albius, impartial critic of my "chats,"<sup>a</sup> what shall I say you now are doing in your country at Pedum? Writing something to outshine the pieces of Cassius of Parma<sup>b</sup>? Or strolling peacefully amid the healthful woods, and musing on all that is worthy of one wise and good? Never were you a body without soul. The gods gave you beauty, the gods gave you wealth, and the art of enjoyment.<sup>c</sup> For what more would a fond nurse pray for her sweet ward, if he could think aright and utter his thoughts—if favour, fame, and health fall to him richly, with a seemly living and a never failing purse?

Amid hopes and cares, amid fears and passions, believe that every day that has dawned is your last. Welcome will steal upon you the hour un hoped for. As for me, when you want a laugh, you will find me in fine fettle, fat and sleek, a hog from Epicurus's herd.

"conversations," and was adopted by Horace for his Satires. See Introduction B, note a.

<sup>b</sup> The scholiasts identify him with Cassius Etruscus of Sat. i. 10. 61. So too Ullman, loc. cit. p. 164.

<sup>c</sup> If Ullman's view is correct, Horace is here contrasting the son Albius with the father of the same name.

V

TO TORQUATUS

HORACE here invites to a simple dinner, on the eve of the birthday of Augustus, a member of the wealthy family of the Manlii Torquati, probably the same as the one to whom the seventh ode of the Fourth Book is later addressed. Torquatus is asked to bring some guests.

As to the hour set for the dinner Porphyrio explains supremo sole (l. 3) as meaning hora sexta, i.e. midday, and Professor A. J. Bell favours this interpretation (Classical Review, xxix. (1915) p. 200. But Horace's simple dinner is quite unlike the extravagant one given by Nasidienus, which began de medio die (Sat. ii. 8. 3), and people who have spent a hot September in Rome will not think it likely that the sensitive poet would have invited his guests to come at high noon in that unpleasant month. As to the last two lines Torquatus is presumably a busy lawyer, and some of his clients might have to wait till late in the day in order to consult him. If so, this would be another reason why Horace would not expect his friend to come before evening. Maecenas, also a busy man, dined sub lumina prima (Sat. ii. 7. 33).

V.

Si potes Archiacis conviva recumbere lectis
 nec modica cenare times holus omne patella,
 supremo te sole domi, Torquate, manebo.
 vina bibes iterum Tauro diffusa palustris
 inter Minturnas Sinuessanumque Petrinum. 5
 si melius quid habes, arcesse, vel imperium fer.
 iamdudum splendet focus et tibi munda supellex.
 mitte levis spes et certamina divitiarum et Moschi causam : cras nato Caesare festus dat veniam somnumque dies ; impune licebit 10
 aestivam<sup>1</sup> sermone benigno tendere noctem.

Quo mihi fortunam,<sup>2</sup> si non conceditur uti ?
 parcus ob heredis curam nimiumque severus
 adsidet insano. potare et spargere flores incipiam, patiarque vel inconsultus haberi. 15
 quid non ebrietas dissignat<sup>3</sup> ? operta recludit,

<sup>1</sup> festivam.    <sup>2</sup> fortuna R: fortunae.    <sup>3</sup> designat aφ Goth.

<sup>a</sup> Archias was a maker of unpretentious furniture. According to Porphyrio his couches were small ones. See note on l. 29.

<sup>b</sup> 26 B.C. At that time the wine had been poured from the large dolium into the smaller amphorae.

<sup>c</sup> According to the Scholiasts, Moschus, a rhetorician from Pergamum, was accused of poisoning, and defended by Torquatus as well as by Asinius Pollio.

<sup>d</sup> September 23. September is one of the warmest months in Rome.

<sup>e</sup> In dissignare the original idea of sealing seems to be

EPISTLE V

If you can recline at my table on couches made by Archias,<sup>a</sup> and are not afraid of "a dinner of herbs" only, from a modest dish, I shall expect you, Torquatus, at my house at sunset. You will drink wine that was bottled in Taurus's second consulate<sup>b</sup> between marshy Minturnae and Petrinum near Sinuessa. If you have aught better, bid it be sent, or submit to orders. Long has my hearth been bright, and the furniture made neat for you. Dismiss airy hopes and the struggle for wealth, and Moschus's cause.<sup>c</sup> To-morrow, the festal day of Caesar's birth,<sup>d</sup> gives excuse for sleeping late; without penalty shall we be free to prolong the summer night in genial converse.

<sup>12</sup> Why is fortune mine, if I may not use it? He who, from regard to his heir, pinches and spares overmuch is next door to a madman. I shall begin the drinking and the scattering of flowers, and shall suffer you, if you will, to think me reckless. What a miracle cannot the wine-cup work!<sup>e</sup> It unlocks negatived by the prefix dis-, and to "unseal" (a verb appropriately used in the present connexion) signifies (according to Porphyrio) to "open," i.e. reveal something. Hence it is used of any strange effect. Cf. Terence, Adelphi, 87, "modo quid dissignavit?" "What out-of-the-way thing has he now done?" For the general thought cf. Od. iii. 21. 13 ff.

HORACE

spes iubet esse ratas, ad proelia trudit inertem,<sup>1</sup>
 sollicitis animis onus eximit, addocet<sup>2</sup> artes.
 fecundi<sup>3</sup> calices quem non fecere disertum ?
 contracta quem non in paupertate solutum ?

Haec ego procurare et idoneus imperor et non invitus, ne turpe toral, ne sordida mappa corruget naris, ne non et cantharus et lanx ostendat tibi te, ne fidos inter amicos sit qui dicta foras eliminat, ut<sup>4</sup> coeat par iungaturque pari.

25

26

27

28

29

30

31

32

33

34

35

36

37

38

39

40

41

42

43

44

45

46

47

48

49

50

51

52

53

54

55

56

57

58

59

60

61

62

63

64

65

66

67

68

69

70

71

72

73

74

75

76

77

78

79

80

81

82

83

84

85

86

87

88

89

90

91

92

93

94

95

96

97

98

99

100

101

102

103

104

105

106

107

108

109

110

111

112

113

114

115

116

117

118

119

120

121

122

123

124

125

126

127

128

129

130

131

132

133

134

135

136

137

138

139

140

141

142

143

144

145

146

147

148

149

150

151

152

153

154

155

156

157

158

159

160

161

162

163

164

165

166

167

168

169

170

171

172

173

174

175

176

177

178

179

180

181

182

183

184

185

186

187

188

189

190

191

192

193

194

195

196

197

198

199

200

201

202

203

204

205

206

207

208

209

210

211

212

213

214

215

216

217

218

219

220

221

222

223

224

225

226

227

228

229

230

231

232

233

234

235

236

237

238

239

240

241

242

243

244

245

246

247

248

249

250

251

252

253

254

255

256

257

258

259

260

261

262

263

264

265

266

267

268

269

270

271

272

273

274

275

276

277

278

279

280

281

282

283

284

285

286

287

288

289

290

291

292

293

294

295

296

297

298

299

300

301

302

303

304

305

306

307

308

309

310

311

312

313

314

315

316

317

318

319

320

321

322

323

324

325

326

327

328

329

330

331

332

333

334

335

336

337

338

339

340

341

342

343

344

345

346

347

348

349

350

351

352

353

354

355

356

357

358

359

360

361

362

363

364

365

366

367

368

369

370

371

372

373

374

375

376

377

378

379

380

381

382

383

384

385

386

387

388

389

390

391

392

393

394

395

396

397

398

399

400

401

402

403

404

405

406

407

408

409

410

411

412

413

414

415

416

417

418

419

420

421

422

423

424

425

426

427

428

429

430

431

432

433

434

435

436

437

438

439

440

441

442

443

444

445

446

447

448

449

450

451

452

453

454

455

456

457

458

459

460

461

462

463

464

465

466

467

468

469

470

471

472

473

474

475

476

477

478

479

480

481

482

483

484

485

486

487

488

489

490

491

492

493

494

495

496

497

498

499

500

501 502

503

504

505

506

507

508

509

510

511

512

513

514

515

516

517

518

519

520

521

522

523

524

525

526

527

528

529

530

531

532

533

534

535

536

537

538

539

540

541

542

543

544

545

546

547

548

549

550

551

552

553

554

555

556

557

558

559

560

561

562

563

564

565

566

567

568

569

570

571

572

573

574

575

576

577

578

579

580

581

582

583

584

585

586

587

588

589

590

591

592

593

594

595

596

597

598

599

600

601

602

603

604

605

606

607

608

609

610

611

612

613

614

615

616

617

618

619

620

621

622

623

624

625

626

627

628

629

630

631

632

633

634

635

636

637

638

639

640

641

642

643

644

645

646

647

648

649

650

651

652

653

654

655

656

657

658

659

660

661

662

663

664

665

666

667

668

669

670

671

672

673

674

675

676

677

678

679

680

681

682

683

684

685

686

687

688

689

690

691

692

693

694

695

696

697

698

699

700

701

702

703

704

705

706

707

708

709

710

711

712

713

714

715

716

717

718

719

720

721

722

723

724

725

726

727

728

729

730

731

732

733

734

735

736

737

738

739

740

741

742

743

744

745

746

747

748

749

750

751

752

753

754

755

756

757

758

759

760

761

762

763

764

765

766

767

768

769

770

771

772

773

774

775

776

777

778

779

780

781

782

783

784

785

786

787

788

789

790

791

792

793

794

795

796

797

798

799

800

801

802

803

804

805

806

807

808

809

810

811

812

813

814

815

816

817

818

819

820

821

822

823

824

825

826

827

828

829

830

831

832

EPISTLES, I. v. 17-31

secrets, bids hopes be fulfilled, thrusts the coward into the field, takes the load from anxious hearts, teaches new arts. The flowing bowl—whom has it not made eloquent? Whom has it not made free even amid pinching poverty?

<sup>21</sup> Here is what I charge myself to provide—and able and willing I am: that no untidy coverlet, no soiled napkin wrinkle up your nose; that tankard and plate become for you a mirror; that there be none to carry abroad what is said among faithful friends; that like may meet and mate with like.

<sup>22</sup> Butra and Septicius I shall have to meet you, and Sabinus, unless a better supper and a goodlier girl detain him. There is room, too, for several "shades"<sup>a</sup>; but the reek of goats makes too crowded feasts unpleasant.<sup>b</sup> Write back, pray, how many you would like us to be; then drop your business, and by the back-door give the slip to the client waiting in your hall.

was the warm season Horace does not want his small couches to be too crowded.

VI

TO NUMICIUS

NOTHING is known about the person to whom this letter is addressed, but the ideas expressed in it have made it one of the most famous of Horace's epistles.

The key-note is struck in the opening phrase, nil admirari, a rendering of the τὸ μηδὲν θαυμάζειν of Pythagoras, or of ἡ ἀθαυμαστία of philosophers in general (Strabo, i. 3. 21). This ἀθαυμαστία, identical with the ἀθαμβία of Democritus (Cic. De fin. v. 29. 87), the ἀταραξία of the Epicureans, and the ἀπάθεια of the Stoics, is a philosophic calm, a composure of mind and feeling, a freedom from exciting emotions, which ancient philosophy often regarded as the summum bonum and which Tennyson defines so well in his Lucretius :

O thou,
Passionless bride, divine Tranquillity,
Yearn'd after by the wisest of the wise,
Who fail to find thee, being as thou art
Without one pleasure and without one pain.

This "wise indifference," says Horace, is perhaps the only clue to happiness. If men can gaze unmoved on the wonders of the firmament, they can surely look calmly upon things of less moment, such as wealth and honours, neither craving their rewards nor fearing their loss. "Nothing in excess" should be one's rule even in the pursuit of Virtue. And bear in mind that, however much you may long for treasures of art, for fame and wealth, death must be the end of all (1-27).

EPISTLES, I. VI.

You think I am wrong? If you are ill, you take medicine; if you want to "live well," and know that Virtue alone can give you that boon, follow her at all costs. If, on the contrary, you think Virtue a mere name, then make haste to get rich. Be not like the Cappadocian king, who was so poor, but rather be like Lucullus, who didn't know how wealthy he was (28-48).

If you have set your heart on office and honours, stoop to all the tricks of the politicians (49-55). If "living well" means for you good eating (56-64) or love and pleasure (65, 66), then think of nothing else.

Such are my views. Have you anything better to offer? (67, 68).

VI.

Nil admirari prope res est una, Numici,
 solaque quae possit facere et servare beatum.
 hunc solem et stellas et decedentia certis
 tempora momentis sunt qui formidine nulla imbuti spectent : quid censes munera terrae, 5
 quid maris extremos Arabas ditantis et Indos, ludicra quid, plausus et amici dona Quiritis,
 quo spectanda modo, quo sensu credis et ore ?

Qui timet his adversa, fere miratur eodem quo cupiens pacto : pavor est utrobique molestus, 10
 improvisa simul species exterret utrumque.<sup>1</sup>
 gaudeat an doleat, cupiat metuatne, quid ad rem, si, quicquid vidit melius peiusve<sup>2</sup> sua spe,
 defixis oculis animoque et corpore torpet ?
 insani sapiens nomen ferat, aequus iniqui, 15
 ultra quam satis est Virtutem si petat<sup>3</sup> ipsam.

I nunc, argentum et marmor vetus aeraque et artes suspice,<sup>4</sup> cum gemmis Tyrios mirare colores ;
 gaude quod spectant<sup>5</sup> oculi te mille loquentem ;
 navus mane forum et vespertinus pete tectum, 20
 ne plus frumenti dotalibus emetat agris
 Mutus et (indignum, quod sit peioribus ortus)

<sup>1</sup> exterret (-it R) utrumque, II: most editors exterruit utrum aE.

<sup>2</sup> peiusne Rδ.

<sup>4</sup> suscipe Eλλπ.

<sup>3</sup> petet aM.

<sup>5</sup> spectent E.

EPISTLE VI

“Marvel at nothing”—that is perhaps the one and only thing, Numicius, that can make a man happy and keep him so. Yon sun, the stars and seasons that pass in fixed courses—some can gaze upon these with no strain of fear: what think you of the gifts of earth, or what of sea, which makes rich far distant Arabs and Indians—what of the shows, the plaudits and the favours of the friendly Roman—in what wise, with what feelings and eyes think you they should be viewed?

<sup>9</sup> And he who fears their opposites “marvels” in much the same way as the man who desires: in either case ’tis the excitement that annoys, the moment some unexpected appearance startles either. Whether a man feel joy or grief, desire or fear, what matters it if, when he has seen aught better or worse than he expected, his eyes are fast riveted, and mind and body are benumbed? Let the wise man bear the name of madman, the just of unjust, should he pursue Virtue herself beyond due bounds.

<sup>17</sup> Go now, gaze with rapture on silver plate, antique marble, bronzes and works of art; “marvel” at gems and Tyrian dyes; rejoice that a thousand eyes survey you as you speak; in your diligence get you to the Forum early, to your home late, lest Mutus reap more grain from the lands of his wife’s dower, and (oh the shame, for he sprang from meaner

HORACE

hic tibi sit potius quam tu mirabilis illi.
 quidquid sub terra est, in apricum proferet<sup>1</sup> aetas, defodiet condetque nitentia. cum bene notum 25
 porticus Agrippae, via te<sup>2</sup> conspexerit Appi, ire tamen restat Numa quo devenit et Ancus.

Si latus aut renes morbo temptantur acuto, quaere fugam morbi. vis recte vivere: quis non?
 si Virtus hoc una potest dare, fortis omissis 30
 hoc age·deliciis.

Virtutem verba putas<sup>3</sup> et lucum ligna: cave ne portus occupet alter,
 ne Cibyratica, ne Bithyna negotia perdas;
 mille talenta rotundentur, totidem altera, porro et<sup>4</sup>
 tertia succedant et quae pars quadret<sup>5</sup> acervum. 35
 scilicet uxorem cum dote fidemque et amicos et genus et formam regina Pecunia donat, ac bene nummatum decorat Suadela Venusque.
 mancupiis locuples eget aeris Cappadocum rex:
 ne<sup>6</sup> fueris hic tu. chlamydes Lucullus, ut aiunt, 40
 si posset centum scaenae praebere rogatus,
 "qui possum tot?" ait; "tamen et quaeram et quot habebo
 mittam:" post paulo scribit sibi milia quinque esse domi chlamydum; partem vel tolleret omnis.
 exilis domus est, ubi non et multa supersunt 45
 et dominum fallunt et prosunt furibus. ergo

<sup>1</sup> proferat aM.

<sup>3</sup> putes A<sup>2d</sup> Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> quadrat aM.

<sup>2</sup> et via, II.

<sup>4</sup> et omitted aMδ.

<sup>6</sup> nec E.

<sup>a</sup> Both were frequented by the fashionable world. The portico of Agrippa, near the Pantheon, was opened in 25 B.C. For the Appian Way cf. Epode iv. 14 and Sat. i. 5. 6.

<sup>b</sup> This is a proverbial expression, applicable to the material-

stock !) lest you " marvel " at him rather than he at you. Time will bring into the light whatever is under the earth ; it will bury deep and hide what now shines bright. When Agrippa's colonnade, when Appius's way<sup>a</sup> has looked upon your well-known form, still it remains for you to go where Numa and Ancus have gone down before.

<sup>28</sup> If your chest or reins are assailed by a sharp disease, seek a remedy for the disease. You wish to live aright (and who does not ?) ; if then Virtue alone can confer this boon, boldly drop trifles and set to work !

<sup>31</sup> Do you think Virtue but words, and a forest<sup>b</sup> but firewood ? Take care lest your rival make harbour first, lest you lose your ventures from Cibra and Bithynia. Suppose you round off a thousand talents ; as many in a second lot ; then add a third thousand, and enough to square the heap. Of course a wife and dowry, credit and friends, birth and beauty, are the gift of Queen Cash, and the goddesses Persuasion and Venus grace the man who is well-to-do. The Cappadocian king<sup>c</sup> is rich in slaves, but lacks coin : be not like him. Lucullus, 'tis said, was asked if he could lend a hundred cloaks for the stage. " How can I so many ? " he answers, " yet I'll look and send as many as I have." A little later he writes : " I have five thousand cloaks at home ; take some or all." Poor is the house where there's not much to spare, much that escapes the master and profits his ists of the day, who were ready to cut down even sacred groves.

<sup>c</sup> Viz. Ariobarzanes, of whom Cicero says, " erat rex perpauper " (Ad Att. vi. 3). For Lucullus see Plutarch's Lives, Lucullus, ch. 39. Horace expands the story somewhat.

HORACE

si res sola potest facere et servare beatum, hoc primus<sup>1</sup> repetas opus, hoc postremus omittas.

Si fortunatum species et gratia praestat, mercemur servum, qui dictet nomina, laevum<sup>2</sup> 50
qui fodicet latus et cogat trans pondera<sup>3</sup> dextram porrigere : " hic<sup>4</sup> multum in Fabia valet, ille Velina ;
cui libet hic fasces dabit eripietque curule
cui volet importunus ebur." " frater," " pater " adde :
ut cuique est aetas, ita quemque facetus adopta.<sup>5</sup> 55

Si bene qui cenat bene vivit, lucet, eamus quo ducit gula ; piscemur, venemur, ut olim Gargilius, qui mane plagas, venabula, servos differtum transire<sup>6</sup> forum populumque<sup>7</sup> iubebat, unus ut e multis populo spectante referret 60
emptum mulus aprum. crudi tuique lavemur, quid deceat, quid non, obliti, Caerite cera
digni, remigium vitiosum Ithacensis Ulixei, cui potior patria<sup>8</sup> fuit interdicta voluptas.
si, Mimnermus uti censet, sine amore iocisque 65
nil est iucundum, vivas in amore iocisque.

Vive, vale ! si quid novisti rectius istis, candidus imperti ; si nil,<sup>9</sup> his utere mecum.

<sup>1</sup> primum, II.

<sup>2</sup> laevum E : saevum (i.e. scaevum) aM, II ; so Pithoeus.

<sup>3</sup> pondere, II.

<sup>4</sup> his or is Rδπ.

<sup>5</sup> adapta φψλλ.

<sup>6</sup> transferre Goth.

<sup>7</sup> campum Bentley.

<sup>8</sup> patriae, II.

<sup>9</sup> non, II.

<sup>a</sup> A slave, called nomenclator, had the duty of informing his master of the names of people he did not know.

<sup>b</sup> The scholiasts explain pondera as the term applied to the high stepping-stones used for crossing the streets as may be seen in Pompeii. Horace, therefore, is picturing the ambitious politicians as hurrying over these to greet a voter on the other side of the street. Other interpretations, knaves. So if wealth alone can make you happy and keep you so, be the first to go back to this task, the last to leave it off.

<sup>49</sup> If pomp and popularity make the fortunate man, let us buy a slave to call off names,<sup>a</sup> to nudge our left side, and make us stretch out the hand across the streets.<sup>b</sup> "This man has much influence in the Fabian tribe; that in the Veline. This man will give the fasces to whom he will, or, if churlish, will snatch the curule ivory from whom he pleases." Throw in "Brother!" "Father!"—politely adopt each one according to his age.

<sup>56</sup> If he who dines well, lives well, then—'tis daybreak, let's be off, whither the palate guides us. Let us fish, let us hunt, like Gargilius in the story. At dawn of day he would bid his slaves with hunting-nets and spears pass through the throng in the crowded Forum, that in the sight of that same throng one mule of all the train might bring home a boar he had purchased. While gorged with undigested food, let us bathe, forgetful of what is or is not seemly, deserving to have our place in the Caere class,<sup>c</sup> like the wicked crew of Ulysses of Ithaca, to whom forbidden pleasure was dearer than fatherland. If, as Mimnermus holds, without love and jests there is no joy, live amid love and jests.

<sup>67</sup> Live long, farewell. If you know something better than these precepts, pass it on, my good fellow. If not, join me in following these.

such as that pondera means the weights on a shop-counter, are pure conjectures.

<sup>c</sup> As deserving to be disfranchised. The people of Caere were municipes sine suffragii iure (Gellius, xvi. 13). The word cera refers to the wax-covered tablets on which the lists of citizens were entered.

VII

TO MAECENAS

MAECENAS has apparently reproached Horace for staying in the country longer than he had said he would, when he himself had to remain in Rome, and perhaps he had reminded the poet of his obligations to his patron.

Horace makes a manly and dignified reply. He assures his patron that he is not ungrateful for past benefits, but he must consider his health, and he refuses to surrender his personal independence. If that is demanded, he is willing to give up everything that Maecenas has conferred upon him.

The poet's attitude is illustrated by several stories, the last of which—the tale of Philippus and his client, Volteius Mena—takes up half of the poem. Of this Swift has made a very humorous use in his "Address to the Earl of Oxford."

VII.

Quinque dies tibi pollicitus me rure futurum, Sextilem totum mendax desideror. atque<sup>1</sup>
 si me vivere vis sanum recteque valentem,
 quam mihi das aegro, dabis aegrotare timenti, Maecenas, veniam, dum ficus prima calorque<sup>2</sup> 5
 dissignatorem decorat lictoribus atris,
 dum pueris omnis pater et matercula pallet.
 officiosaque sedulitas et opella forensis
 adducit<sup>3</sup> febris et testamenta resignat.
 quod si bruma nives Albanis illinet agris, 10
 ad mare descendet vates tuus et sibi parcet contractusque leget; te, dulcis amice, reviset cum Zephyris, si concedes,<sup>4</sup> et hirundine prima.
 Non quo more piris vesci Calaber iubet hospes,
 tu me fecisti locupletem. "vescere, sodes." 15
 "iam satis est." "at tu quantum vis tolle." "benigne."
 "non invisa feres pueris munuscula parvis."
 "tam teneor dono, quam si dimittar onustus."
 "ut libet; haec porcis hodie comedenda relinques."<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> atqui E, but cf. (e.g.) Terence, Andria 225.

<sup>2</sup> colorque Va.

<sup>3</sup> adducet Rδπ.

<sup>4</sup> concedis E.

<sup>5</sup> relinquis φψλ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Quinque is a round number here. Similarly, decem dies may be used of "a long week."

EPISTLE VII

Only a week <sup>a</sup> was I to stay in the country—such was my promise—but, false to my word, I am missed the whole of August. And yet, if you would have me live sound and in good health, the indulgence which you grant me when ill you will grant me when I fear to become ill, while the first figs and the heat adorn the undertaker with his black attendants, while every father and fond mother turns pale with fear for the children, and while diligence in courtesies <sup>b</sup> and the Forum's petty business bring on fevers and unseal wills. But if winter shall strew the Alban fields with snow, your poet will go down to the sea, will be careful of himself and, huddled up, will take to his reading: you, dear friend, he will—if you permit—revisit along with the zephyrs and the first swallow.

<sup>14</sup> 'Twas not in the way a Calabrian host invites you to eat his pears that you have made me rich. "Eat some, pray." "I've had enough." "Well, take away all you please." "No, thanks." "Your tiny tots will love the little gifts you take them." "I'm as much obliged for your offer as if you sent me away loaded down." "As you please; you'll be leaving them for the swine to gobble up to-day."

<sup>b</sup> The phrase refers to social duties, such as attendance upon the great.

HORACE

prodigus et stultus donat quae spernit et odit ; 20
 haec seges ingratos<sup>1</sup> tulit et feret omnibus annis.
 vir bonus et sapiens dignis ait esse paratus,
 nec tamen ignorat quid distent aera lupinis.
 dignum praestabo me etiam pro laude merentis.
 quod si me noles usquam discedere, reddes 25
 forte latus, nigros angusta fronte capillos, reddes dulce loqui, reddes ridere decorum et inter vina fugam Cinarae maerere protervae.

Forte per angustam tenuis volpecula<sup>2</sup> rimam repserat in cumeram<sup>3</sup> frumenti, pastaque rursus 30 ire foras pleno tendebat corpore frustra ;
 cui mustela procul, " si vis," ait, " effugere istinc,
 macra cavum repetes artum, quem macra subisti."
 hac ego si compellor imagine, cuncta resigno ;
 nec somnum plebis laudo satur altitium nec 35
 otia divitiis Arabum liberrima muto.
 saepe verecundum laudasti, rexque paterque
 audisti coram nec verbo parcius absens :
 inspice si possum donata reponere laetus.
 haud<sup>4</sup> male Telemachus, proles patientis<sup>5</sup> Ulixei : 40
 " non est aptus equis Ithace locus, ut neque planis

<sup>1</sup> ingrato E<sup>2</sup><sup>δ</sup><sup>2</sup> : ingratis φψλλ.

<sup>2</sup> nitedula Bentley : accepted by Lachmann, Kiessling, Holder and others.

<sup>4</sup> at φψλλ : aut *R*π.

<sup>3</sup> cameram π.

<sup>5</sup> sapientis E.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. real money and the imitation lupine seeds, used for counters in playing games.

<sup>b</sup> For the beauty of a narrow brow cf. Od. i. 33. 5. " insignem tenui fronte Lycorida." Horace is becoming bald, and is praecanus (Epist. i. 20. 24).

<sup>c</sup> Bentley's conjecture nitedula, " shrew-mouse," has been

The foolish prodigal gives away what he despises and dislikes : the field thus sown has always yielded, and always will yield, a crop of ingratitude. Your good and wise man claims to be ready to help the worthy, and yet he knows well how coins and counters<sup>a</sup> differ. Worthy I, too, will show myself, as the glory of your good deed demands. But if you will never suffer me to leave you, you must give me back strength of lung, and black locks on a narrow brow<sup>b</sup> ; you must give back a pleasant prattle, give back graceful laughter and laments amid our cups o'er saucy Cinara's flight.

<sup>29</sup> Once it chanced that a pinched little fox<sup>c</sup> had crept through a narrow chink into a bin of corn, and when well fed was trying with stuffed stomach to get out again, but in vain. To him quoth a weasel hard by : " If you wish to escape from there, you must go back lean to the narrow gap which you entered when lean." If challenged by this fable, I give up all. I neither praise the poor man's sleep, when I am fed full on capons, nor would I barter my ease and my freedom for all the wealth of Araby. Often have you praised my modesty, and have been called " king "<sup>d</sup> and " father " to your face, nor do I stint my words behind your back. Try me, whether I can restore your gifts, and cheerfully too. 'Twas no poor answer of Telemachus, son of enduring Ulysses<sup>e</sup> : " Ithaca is no land meet for steeds, for widely accepted, because in real life the fox does not eat grain. But the traditional text must be retained.

<sup>a</sup> The term rex was used of a patron ; cf " coram rege suo," Epist. i. 17. 43.

<sup>c</sup> In the Odyssey (iv. 601ff.). Telemachus, son of Odysseus, declines the horses and chariot offered him in friendship by Menelaus.

HORACE

porrectus spatiis nec multae prodigus herbae :
 Atride, magis apta tibi tua dona relinquam."
 parvum parva decent : mihi iam non regia Roma,
 sed vacuum Tibur placet aut imbelles Tarentum. 45

Strenuus et fortis causisque Philippus agendis
 clarus, ab officiis octavam circiter horam
 dum redit atque Foro nimium distare Carinas
 iam grandis natu queritur, conspexit, ut aiunt, adrasum quandam vacua tonsoris in umbra 50
 cultello proprios<sup>1</sup> purgantem<sup>2</sup> leniter unguis.

"Demetri," (puer hic non laeve iussa Philippi accipiebat) "abi, quaere et refer, unde domo, quis, cuius fortunae, quo sit patre quove patrono."
 it,<sup>3</sup> redit et narrat, Volteium nomine Menam, 55
 praeconem, tenui censu, sine crimine, notum et properare loco<sup>4</sup> et cessare et quaerere et uti, gaudentem parvisque sodalibus et lare certo<sup>5</sup>
 et ludis et post decisa negotia Campo.

"scitari libet ex ipso quodcumque refers : dic 60
 ad cenam veniat." non sane credere Mena, mirari secum tacitus. quid multa ? "benigne," respondet.<sup>6</sup> "neget<sup>7</sup> ille mihi ?" "negat improbus et te neglegit aut horret."

Volteium mane Philippus

vilis vendentem tunicato scruta popello 65
 occupat et salvere iubet prior. ille Philippo
 excusare laborem et mercennaria vincla,

<sup>1</sup> proprio.

<sup>2</sup> resecantem E Goth.

<sup>3</sup> et, II.

<sup>4</sup> locum, II.

<sup>5</sup> curto.

<sup>6</sup> respondit δ Goth.

<sup>7</sup> negat α Goth.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. such games as those of the Circus and the athletic contests in the Campus Martius.

it has no level courses outspread, nor is it lavish of much herbage. Son of Atreus, I will leave you your gifts, as being more meet for you." Small things befit small folk; my own delight to-day is not queenly Rome, but quiet Tibur or peaceful Tarentum.

<sup>46</sup> Philippus, the famous pleader, a man of vigour and courage, was returning home from work about two o'clock. Being now somewhat on in years, he was grumbling at the Carinae being too far from the Forum, when (so the story goes) he caught sight of a man close-shaven, sitting in a barber's empty booth, and with pocket-knife quietly cleaning his nails for himself. "Demetrius" (this lad was not slow to catch his master's orders), "go, ask, and bring me word, where that man's from, who he is, and what's his standing, who is his father, or who his patron." He goes, and comes back with the tale that his name is Volteius Mena, a crier at auctions, of modest fortune and blameless record, known to work hard and idle in season, to make money and spend it, taking pleasure in his humble friends and a home of his own and, when business is over, in the games and in the field of Mars.<sup>a</sup> "I'd like to hear from his own lips all you tell me. Bid him come to supper." Mena cannot really believe it; he marvels in thoughtful silence. To be brief, "No, thank you," he answers. "Would he refuse me?" "He does, the rascal, and either slights or dreads you."

<sup>65</sup> Next morning Philippus comes on Volteius selling cheap odds and ends to the common folk in tunics<sup>b</sup> and is first to give a greeting. The other makes work and the ties of his trade an excuse to <sup>b</sup> The common people did not wear the toga in daily life.

HORACE

quod non mane domum venisset, denique quod non providisset<sup>1</sup> eum. " sic ignovisse putato 69 me tibi, si cenas hodie mecum." " ut libet." " ergo post nonam venies : nunc i, rem strenuus auge."
 ut ventum ad cenam est,<sup>2</sup> dicenda tacenda locutus tandem dormitum dimittitur.

Hic ubi saepe

occultum visus decurrere piscis ad hamum, mane cliens et iam certus conviva, iubetur 75
 rura suburbana indictis comes ire Latinis.
 impositus mannīs arvum caelumque Sabinum
 non cessat laudare. videt ridetque Philippus, et sibi dum requiem, dum risus undique quaerit,
 dum septem donat sestertia, mutua septem 80
 promittit, persuadet uti mercetur agellum.
 mercatur. ne<sup>3</sup> te longis ambagibus<sup>4</sup> ultra
 quam satis est morer, ex nitido fit rusticus atque sulcos et vineta crepat mera, praeparat ulmos, immoritur studiis et amore senescit habendi. 85
 verum ubi oves furto, morbo periere capellae,
 spem mentita seges, bos est enectus arando,
 offensus damnis media de nocte caballum
 arripit iratusque Philippi tendit ad aedis. 89
 quem simul aspexit scabrum intonsumque Philippus,
 " durus," ait, " Voltei, nimis attentusque videris esse mihi." " pol, me miserum, patrone, vocares, si velles," inquit, " verum mihi ponere<sup>5</sup> nomen.

<sup>1</sup> praevидisset.

<sup>2</sup> est omitted π.

<sup>3</sup> nec Rλπ.

<sup>4</sup> ambiguus Rπ.

<sup>5</sup> ponere VaE : dicere R, II.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. to pay his respects, in view of the invitation sent him.

<sup>b</sup> The feriae Latinae were held annually on a day appointed and announced—usually at the end of April or the beginning of May. All legal business was suspended for the time.

Philippus for not having come to his house that morning,<sup>a</sup> in fine for not seeing him first. "You're to take it that I've pardoned you only if you sup with me to-day." "As you please." "You will come then after three o'clock. Now go, set to and add to your wealth!" On coming to supper, he batted about anything and everything, and then at last was sent off to bed.

<sup>73</sup> When he had often been seen to run like a fish to the hidden hook, in the morning a client and now a constant guest, he was invited to come as companion, when the Latin games were proclaimed,<sup>b</sup> to a country estate near Rome. Mounted behind the ponies, he is ever praising the Sabine soil and climate. Philippus notes and smiles, and what with looking for his own relief and amusement from any source, and what with giving him seven thousand sesterces, and offering him a loan of seven thousand more, he persuades him to buy a little farm. He does so. Not to hold you too long with a rambling tale, our spruce cit becomes a rustic and chatters about nothing but furrows and vineyards, makes ready his elms, nearly kills himself over his hobbies, and grows old with his passion for getting. But when he has lost his sheep by theft and his goats by disease, when his crops have fooled his hopes and his ox is worn to death with ploughing, fretting over his losses, in the middle of the night he seizes his nag and in a rage makes straight for the house of Philippus. He, soon as he saw him, rough and unshorn, "Volteius," cries he, "you seem to me too hard-worked and over-strained." "Egad! my patron," said he, "you would call me miserable wretch, if you could give me my true name. But quod te per Genium dextramque deosque Penatis

HORACE

obsecro et obtestor, vitae me redde priori ! ” 95

Qui semel<sup>1</sup> aspexit, quantum dimissa petitis praestent, mature redeat repetatque relictæ.
metiri se quemque suo modulo ac pede verum est.

<sup>1</sup> semel early editions : simul MSS. ; taken from l. 90.

EPISTLES, I. VII. 94-98

by your genius, by your right hand and household gods, I implore and entreat you, put me back in my former life."

<sup>96</sup> Let him, who once has seen how far what he has given up excels what he has sought, go back in time and seek again the things he has left. 'Tis right that each should measure himself by his own rule and standard.

VIII

TO CELSUS ALBINOVANUS

THIS brief letter is addressed to the Celsus mentioned in the third epistle of this book as a member of the staff of Tiberius Claudius Nero.

The poet confesses that he himself is out of sorts and discontented, but the main point of his letter lies in the admonition to his friend not to be unduly elated by his good fortune.

VIII.

Celso gaudere et bene rem gerere Albinovano Musa rogata refer, comiti scribaeque Neronis.
 si quaeret<sup>1</sup> quid agam, dic multa et pulchra minantem vivere nec recte nec suaviter ; haud<sup>2</sup> quia grando contuderit vitis oleamque<sup>3</sup> momorderit aestus, 5 nec quia longinquis armentum aegrotet in agris ;
 sed quia mente minus validus quam corpore toto
 nil audire velim, nil discere, quod levet aegrum ;
 fidis offendar medicis, irascar amicis, cur me<sup>4</sup> funesto properent arcere<sup>5</sup> veterno ; 10
 quae nocuere sequar, fugiam quae profore credam ;
 Romae Tibur amem ventosus,<sup>6</sup> Tibure Romam.

Post haec, ut valeat, quo pacto rem gerat et se,
 ut placeat iuveni percontare utque cohorti.
 si dicet, “ recte,” primum gaudere, subinde 15
 praeceptum auriculis hoc instillare memento :
 “ ut tu fortunam, sic nos te, Celse, feremus.”

<sup>1</sup> quaerit a.

<sup>2</sup> aut π'.

<sup>3</sup> oleamve E.

<sup>4</sup> mihi E.

<sup>5</sup> urgere π.

<sup>6</sup> venturus V, II, Porph. (on Serm. ii. 7. 28).

EPISTLE VIII

To Celsus Albinovanus greetings and good wishes ! This message bear, O Muse, at my request, to the comrade and secretary of Nero. If he ask you how I fare, tell him that despite many fine promises I live a life neither wise nor pleasant ; not because hail has beaten down my vines and heat blighted my olives, nor because my herds are sickening on distant pastures ; but because, less sound in mind than in all my body, I will listen to nothing, will learn nothing, to relieve my sickness ; quarrel with my faithful physicians, and angrily ask my friends why they are eager to rescue me from fatal lethargy ; because I follow after what has hurt me, avoid what I believe will help me, and am fickle as the wind, at Rome loving Tibur, at Tibur Rome.

Then ask him how his own health is, how in estate and person he is faring, how he stands in favour with prince and staff. If he says " Well," first wish him joy ; then by and by remember to drop this warning in the dear fellow's ears : " As you bear your fortune, Celsus, so we shall bear with you."

IX

TO TIBERIUS

THIS charming letter of introduction is addressed to the young prince Tiberius on behalf of one Septimius, probably the friend of Carm. ii. 6,

Septimi, Gadis aditure mecum et Cantabrum indoctum iuga ferre nostra et barbaras Syrtis.

The delicate tact of the writer, who would seem selfish if he did not heed his friend's request, and might be guilty of effrontery if he did, has often been admired. The letter was probably written in 20 B.C., when Tiberius was preparing to set out for the East.

IX.

Septimius, Claudii, nimirum intellegit unus,
quanti me facias. nam cum rogat et prece cogit
scilicet ut tibi se laudare et tradere coner, dignum mente domoque legentis honesta Neronis,
munere cum fungi propioris censet amici,
quid possim videt ac novit<sup>1</sup> me valdius ipso.
multa quidem dixi cur excusatus abirem ;
sed timui mea ne<sup>2</sup> finxisse minora putarer,
dissimilator opis propriae, mihi commodus uni.
sic ego, maioris fugiens opprobria culpaе, frontis ad urbanae descendi praemia. quod si
depositum laudas ob amici iussa pudorem.
scribe tui gregis hunc et fortem crede bonumque.

<sup>1</sup> ac novit aE Goth : agnovit A<sup>2</sup>, II.

<sup>2</sup> non  $\phi\psi$ .

EPISTLE IX

Only Septimius of course understands how much, Claudius, you make of me. For when he begs and by prayer forces me—mark you!—to an endeavour to commend and present him to you, as one worthy of the mind and household of Nero, the lover of virtue—when he deems that I fill the place of a closer friend, he sees and knows what I can do more fully than myself. To be sure I gave him many reasons for letting me go excused; but I feared that I might be thought to have made out my influence too small, falsely hiding my real power and seeking favour for myself alone. So to avoid the reproach of a graver fault, I have stooped to win the reward of town-bred impudence. But if you approve of my thus doffing modesty at the bidding of a friend, enrol him in your circle and believe him brave and good.

X

TO ARISTIUS FUSCUS

ACCORDING to the scholiasts, Aristius Fuscus, to whom this letter is addressed, was a dramatic writer and a scholar. He appears in the list of Horace's literary friends given in Sat. i. 10. 83, figures in an amusing rôle in Sat. i. 9. 61 ff., and is best known as the man to whom the famous Integer vitae ode (Carm. i. 22) is dedicated.

The Epistle is a rhapsody upon the simplicity and charm of country life addressed to a cultivated man of the town. In the country Horace is perfectly content, save for the fact that his friend is elsewhere.

X.

Urbis amatorem Fuscum salvere iubemus ruris amatores. hac in re scilicet una multum dissimiles, at<sup>1</sup> cetera paene gemelli fraternis animis (quidquid<sup>2</sup> negat alter, et alter)
 adnuimus pariter vetuli notique columbi.<sup>3</sup>

Tu nidum servas; ego laudo ruris amoeni
 rivos et musco circumlita saxa nemusque.
 quid quaeris? vivo et regno, simul ista reliqui
 quae vos ad caelum effertis<sup>4</sup> rumore secundo, utque sacerdotis fugitivus liba recuso;
 pane ego iam mellitis potiore placentis.

Vivere Naturae si<sup>5</sup> convenienter oportet, ponendaeque<sup>6</sup> domo quaerenda est area primum,
 novistine locum potiore rure beato?
 est ubi plus tepeant hiemes, ubi gratior aura
 leniat et rabiem Canis et momenta Leonis, cum semel accepit Solem furibundus acutum?
 est ubi divellat<sup>7</sup> somnos minus invida Cura?
 deterius Libycis olet aut nitet herba lapillis?

<sup>1</sup> at VE: ad a, II.

<sup>2</sup> si quid E.

<sup>3</sup> vetulis notisque columbis V (corrected). Lambinus had conjectured the same reading, columbis being governed by pariter.

<sup>4</sup> effertis V: fertis MSS.

<sup>5</sup> sic φψ.

<sup>6</sup> ponendaeque one Bland.

<sup>7</sup> depellat a.

---

<sup>a</sup> The slave in a priest's household was fed so much on sacrificial cakes that he ran away to get plain fare.

EPISTLE X

To Fuscus, lover of the city, I, a lover of the country, send greetings. In this one point, to be sure, we differ much, but being in all else much like twins with the hearts of brothers—if one says “no,” the other says “no” too—we nod a common assent like a couple of old familiar doves.

<sup>6</sup> You keep the nest ; I praise the lovely country's brooks, its grove and moss-grown rocks. In short : I live and reign, as soon as I have left behind what you townsmen with shouts of applause extol to the skies. Like the priest's runaway slave, I loathe sweet wafers ; 'tis bread I want, and now prefer to honeyed cakes.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>12</sup> If “to live agreeably to Nature”<sup>b</sup> is our duty, and first we must choose a site for building our house, do you know any place to be preferred to the blissful country ? Is there any where winters are milder, where a more grateful breeze tempers the Dog-star's fury and the Lion's onset, when once in frenzy he has caught the sun's piercing shafts ?<sup>c</sup> Is there any where envious Care less distracts our slumber ? Is the grass poorer in fragrance or beauty than Libyan

<sup>b</sup> ὁμολογουμένως τῇ φύσει ζῆν : one of the Stoic rules of life.

<sup>c</sup> The Dog-star rises July 20, becoming visible on July 26. The sun enters Leo July 23. The constellation is compared to a lion roused to fury when wounded with arrows.

HORACE

purior in vicis aqua tendit rumpere plumbum,      20
 quam quae per pronum trepidat cum murmure rivum?
 nempe inter varias nutritur silva columnas,
 laudaturque domus longos quae prospicit agros.
 Naturam expelles<sup>1</sup> furca, tamen usque recurret, et mala perrumpet furtim fastidia<sup>2</sup> victrix.      25

Non, qui Sidonio contendere callidus ostro nescit Aquinatem potantia vellera fucum, certius accipiet damnum propiusve<sup>3</sup> medullis,
 quam qui non poterit vero distinguere falsum.      30
 quem res plus nimio delectavere secundae, mutatae quatient. si quid mirabere, pones
 invitus. fuge magna : licet sub paupere tecto
 reges et regum vita praecurrere amicos.

Cervus equum pugna melior communibus herbis pellebat, donec minor in certamine longo      35
 imploravit opes hominis frenumque recepit ;
 sed postquam victor violens<sup>4</sup> discessit ab hoste,
 non equitem dorso, non frenum depulit ore.
 sic qui pauperiem veritus potiore metallis libertate caret, dominum vehet<sup>5</sup> improbus atque      40 serviet aeternum, quia parvo nesciet uti.
 cui non conveniet sua res, ut<sup>6</sup> calceus olim,
 si pede maior erit, subvertet, si minor, uret.

<sup>1</sup> expellas early editions.

<sup>2</sup> fastigia a, II : vestigia V.

<sup>3</sup> propiusque a.

<sup>4</sup> violens victor E : victo ridens Haupt.

<sup>5</sup> vehit E.

<sup>6</sup> et φψλλ.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the costly pavements of the great Roman houses.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the marble columns of different colours which formed the colonnade surrounding the peristyle or inner court of a 316

mosaics<sup>a</sup>? Is the water purer which in city-streets struggles to burst its leaden pipes than that which dances and purls adown the sloping brook? Why, amid your varied columns<sup>b</sup> you are nursing trees, and you praise the mansion which looks out on distant fields. You may drive out Nature with a pitchfork, yet she will ever hurry back, and, ere you know it, will burst through your foolish contempt in triumph.

<sup>28</sup> The man who has not the skill to match with Sidonian purple the fleeces that drink up Aquinum's dye,<sup>c</sup> will not suffer surer loss or one closer to his heart than he who shall fail to distinguish false from true. One whom Fortune's smiles have delighted overmuch, will reel under the shock of change. If you set your heart on aught, you will be loth to lay it down. Flee grandeur: though humble be your home, yet in life's race you may outstrip kings and the friends of kings.

<sup>34</sup> The stag could best the horse in fighting and used to drive him from their common pasture, until the loser in the long contest begged the help of man and took the bit. But after that, in overweening triumph, he parted from his foe, he did not dislodge the rider from his back or the bit from his mouth. So he who through fear of poverty forfeits liberty, which is better than mines of wealth, will in his avarice carry a master, and be a slave for ever, not knowing how to live on little. When a man's fortune will not fit him, 'tis as oftentimes with a shoe—if too big for the foot, it will trip him; if too small, will chafe.

Roman house. In this court, trees as well as shrubs, were grown.

<sup>c</sup> A lichen found at Aquinum produced a colour like the famous Sidonian purple.

HORACE

Laetus sorte tua vives sapienter, Aristi, nec me dimittēs<sup>1</sup> incastigatum, ubi plura
cogere quam satis est ac non cessare videbor.
imperat aut servit collecta pecunia cuique,
tortum digna sequi potius quam ducere funem.

Haec tibi dictabam post fanum putre Vacunae, excepto quod non simul esses, cetera laetus.

<sup>1</sup> dimittis Rπ.

EPISTLES, I. x. 44-50

<sup>44</sup> You will live wisely, Aristius, if cheerful in your lot, and you will not let me off unrebuked, when I seem to be gathering more than enough and never to rest. Money stored up is for each his lord or his slave, but ought to follow, not lead, the twisted rope.<sup>a</sup>

These lines I am dictating to you behind Vacuna's rumbling shrine, happy on all counts save that you are not with me.

<sup>a</sup> Probably a reference to some story of an animal being led by a rope and running away with its keeper.

XI

TO BULLATIUS

BULLATIUS, a friend of the poet's, has been travelling in the Province of Asia, and Horace, who seems to have had little of the Wanderlust himself, asks him whether, tired of journeying by land and sea, he would like to settle down at even so deserted a place as Lebedus. That lonely spot, with its outlook on the raging sea, appealed strongly to the poet, who would love to live there,

The world forgetting, by the world forgot.

But after all a man's happiness depends, not on his place of abode, but on his state of mind.

XI.

Quid tibi visa Chios, Bullati, notaque Lesbos, quid concinna Samos, quid Croesi regia Sardis, Zmyrna quid et Colophon? maiora minorave<sup>1</sup> fama,
 cunctane<sup>2</sup> prae Campo et Tiberino flumine sordent?
 an venit in votum Attalicis ex urbibus una, 5
 an Lebedum laudas odio maris atque viarum?
 scis Lebedus quid sit: Gabiis desertior atque Fidenis vicus; tamen illic vivere vellem, oblitusque meorum, obliviscendus et illis,
 Neptunum procul e<sup>3</sup> terra spectare furem. 10

Sed neque qui Capua Romam petit, imbre lutoque aspersus, volet in caupona vivere; nec qui frigus collegit, furnos et balnea laudat ut<sup>4</sup> fortunatam plene praestantia vitam;
 nec si te validus iactaverit Auster in alto, 15
 idcirco navem trans Aegaeum mare vendas.

Incolumi Rhodos et Mytilene pulchra facit quod paenula solstitio, campestre nivalibus auris, per brumam Tiberis, Sextili mense caminus.

<sup>1</sup> minorave mss. (-que E): minorane Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> cunctaque aRπ.

<sup>3</sup> ex aR: et E.

<sup>4</sup> et, Il.

<sup>a</sup> The most important were Pergamum, Apollonia, and Thyatira.

<sup>b</sup> According to some editors, ll. 7-10 are supposed to be spoken by Bullatius, perhaps as a quotation from a letter, but why may we not suppose that this lonely sea-side place, which Horace had probably visited when he served with

EPISTLE XI

What did you think of Chios, my Bullatius, and of famous Lesbos? What of charming Samos? What of Sardis, royal home of Croesus? What of Smyrna and Colophon? Whether above or below their fame, do they all seem poor beside the Campus and Tiber's stream? Or is your heart set upon one of the cities of Attalus?<sup>a</sup> Or do you extol Lebedus, because sick of sea and roads? You know what Lebedus is—a town more desolate than Gabii and Fidenae: yet there would I love to live, and forgetting my friends and by them forgotten, gaze from the land on Neptune's distant rage.<sup>b</sup>

Yet he who travels from Capua to Rome, though bespattered with rain and mud, will not want to live on in an inn, nor does he who has caught a chill cry up stoves and baths as fully furnishing a happy life. And so you, though a stiff south wind has tossed you on the deep, will not on that account sell your ship on the far side of the Aegean Sea.

<sup>17</sup> To a sound man Rhodes or fair Mitylene is what a heavy cloak is in summer, an athlete's garb when snowy winds are blowing, the Tiber in winter, a stove in the month of August. While one may, and Brutus, appealed strongly to the poet? With l. 10 cf. Lucretius, ii. 1 f.:

suave, mari magno turbantibus aequora ventis,
e terra magnum alterius spectare laborem.

HORACE

dum licet ac voltum servat Fortuna benignum, 20
 Romae laudetur Samos et Chios et Rhodos absens.
 tu quamcumque deus tibi fortunaverit horam grata sume manu, neu dulcia differ in annum ;
 ut<sup>1</sup> quocumque loco fueris vixisse libenter
 te dicas. nam si ratio et prudentia curas, 25
 non locus effusi late maris arbiter aufert, caelum, non animum, mutant, qui trans mare currunt.
 strenua nos exercet inertia : navibus atque
 quadrigis petimus bene vivere. quod petis hic est, est Ulubris, animus si te non deficit aequus. 30

<sup>1</sup> tu V, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. "patriae quis exsul se quoque fugit?" (Odes ii. 16. 19).

EPISTLES, I. xi. 20-30

Fortune keeps a smiling face, at Rome let Samos be praised, and Chios and Rhodes—though far away ! And you—whatever hour God has given for your weal, take it with grateful hand, nor put off joys from year to year ; so that, in whatever place you have been, you may say that you have lived happily. For if 'tis reason and wisdom that take away cares, and not a site commanding a wide expanse of sea, they change their clime, not their mind, who rush across the sea.<sup>a</sup> 'Tis a busy idleness that is our bane; with yachts and cars we seek to make life happy. What you are seeking is here ; it is at Ulubrae,<sup>b</sup> if there fail you not a mind well balanced.

<sup>b</sup> Ulubrae, called vacuae by Juvenal (Sat. x. 101), was a decaying town in the Pomptine marshes, where the frogs were very clamorous (Cicero, Ad fam. vii. 81).

XII

TO ICCIUS

HORACE introduces Grosphus to Iccius, and in doing so takes occasion to rally his friend on his discontent.

Iccius, whom in one of his Odes (i. 29) Horace rallies for deserting philosophy to take part in a military expedition to Arabia Felix, has now, some five years later, become the procurator or "agent," who had charge of Agrippa's estates in Sicily. Apparently he had written to Horace, grumbling because he was not an independent landowner, to which Horace replies that the agent of a large estate is able to live on the produce very comfortably, inasmuch as it is all at his disposal, though he is not the actual owner. Then in a somewhat ironical vein (12-20), Horace congratulates his friend on being able, amid all his business cares, to study the physics of Empedocles and the dialectic of the Stoics.

The letter closes with some bits of news, preceded by the request to show some courtesy to Pompeius Grosphus, whom we have also encountered in the Odes (ii. 16), where he is spoken of as a wealthy proprietor in Sicily.

XII.

Fructibus Agrippae Siculis, quos colligis, Icci, si recte frueris, non est ut copia maior
 ab Iove donari possit tibi. tolle querellas :
 pauper enim non est, cui rerum suppetit usus.
 si ventri bene, si lateri est pedibusque tuis, nil 5
 divitiae poterunt regales addere maius.
 si forte in medio positorum abstemius herbis vivis et urtica, sic vives protinus, ut te confestim liquidus Fortunae rivus inauret, vel quia naturam mutare pecunia nescit, 10
 vel quia cuncta putas una virtute minora.

Miramur, si Democriti pecus edit agellos cultaque, dum peregre est animus sine corpore velox ;
 cum tu inter scabiem tantam et contagia lucri
 nil parvum sapias et adhuc sublimia cures : 15
 quae mare compescant causae, quid temperet<sup>1</sup> annum,
 stellae sponte sua iussaene vagentur et errent,
 quid premat obscurum lunae, quid proferat orbem,
 quid velit et possit rerum concordia discors,
 Empedocles an Stertinium deliret acumen. 20

Verum seu piscis seu porrum et caepe trucidas,

<sup>1</sup> temperat, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> A reference to the main principle of Empedocles' philosophy that the life of the world is due to a perpetual conflict of the two principles of Love and Strife.

EPISTLE XII

If, Iccius, you are enjoying as you should the Sicilian products which you collect for Agrippa, Jupiter himself could not give you greater abundance. Away with complaints ; for he is not poor, who has enough of things to use. If stomach, lungs, and feet are all in health, the wealth of kings can give you nothing more. If haply you hold aloof from what is within your reach, and live on nettles and other greens, you will go on living in the same way, though Fortune's stream suddenly flood you with gold : either because money cannot change your nature, or because you count all else below the one thing, virtue.

<sup>12</sup> We marvel that the herds of Democritus ate up his meadows and corn-fields, while his swift mind wanders abroad without his body ; whereas you, in the very midst of the contagious itch of gain, still have a taste far from mean, still set your thoughts on lofty themes : what causes hold the sea in check, what rules the year, whether stars roam at large of their own will or by law, what hides the moon's disk in darkness, what brings it into light, what is the meaning and what the effects of Nature's jarring harmony,<sup>a</sup> whether Empedocles is doting or subtle Stertinius.

<sup>21</sup> However, whether it is fish, or only leeks and

HORACE

utere Pompeio Grospho et, si quid petet, ultro defer ; nil Grosphus nisi verum orabit et aequum.
vilis amicorum est annona, bonis ubi quid deest.

Ne tamen ignores, quo sit Romana loco res, 25
Cantaber Agrippae, Claudī virtute Neronis
Armenius cecidit ; ius imperiumque Phraates
Caesaris accepit genibus minor ; aurea fruges
Italiae pleno defudit<sup>1</sup> Copia cornu.

<sup>1</sup> defudit MSS. : defundit VA<sup>2</sup>.

---

<sup>a</sup> According to the scholiast, fish are here mentioned as costly fare in contrast to a simple diet. In trucidās, however, Horace makes a humorous allusion to the Pythagoreans, whom Empedocles followed in regard to the doctrine of transmigration of souls, for he asserted that he himself had once been a fish (εἶν ἀλλ' ἔλλοπος ἰχθύς, Fr. 11 Müll.). To eat a fish, therefore, might mean murder. This ban on living things was extended even to vegetables, cf. Sat. ii. 6. 63 above, and Juvenal's well-known verse

EPISTLES, I. XII. 22-29

onions that you butcher,<sup>a</sup> receive Pompeius Grosphus as a friend, and if he asks aught of you, give it freely: Grosphus will sue for nothing but what is right and fair. The market-price of friends is low, when good men are in need.

<sup>25</sup> Yet, that you may not be ignorant how the world wags in Rome, the Cantabrian has fallen before the valour of Agrippa, the Armenian before that of Claudius Nero. Phraates, on humbled knees, has accepted Caesar's imperial sway.<sup>b</sup> Golden Plenty from full horn has poured her fruits upon Italy.

porrum et caepe nefas violare et frangere morsu

(15. 9), with Mayor's note.

<sup>b</sup> The Cantabrians were conquered by Agrippa in 19 B.C., shortly after Armenia had submitted to Tiberius. In connexion with the latter event, Phraates, the Parthian king, restored the Roman standards taken long before from Crassus at Carrhae.

XIII

TO VINIUS ASINA

HORACE is sending Augustus a copy of his poems, probably the Odes, Books i., ii., iii., which were published in 23 B.C. The volume is carried to court by a messenger, one Vinius, whose cognomen is presumably Asina (l. 8), though the usual form of the name is Asellus.

Instead of writing a formal note to the Emperor to accompany the gift, Horace indulges in the fiction of sending a letter of instructions to the messenger, in which he humorously expresses his anxiety about the reception of the poems.

XIII.

Ut proficiscentem docui te saepe diuque, Augusto reddes signata volumina, Vini,<sup>1</sup>
 si validus, si laetus erit, si denique poscet ;
 ne studio nostri pecces odiumque libellis
 sedulus importes opera vehemente minister. 5 si te forte meae gravis uret<sup>2</sup> sarcina chartae, abicito potius, quam quo perferre iuberis
 clitellas ferus impingas, Asinaeque paternum cognomen veritas in risum et fabula fias.

Viribus uteris per clivos, flumina, lamas. 10
 victor propositi simul ac perveneris illuc, sic positum servabis onus, ne forte sub ala
 fasciculum portes librorum ut rusticus agnum, ut vinosa glomus<sup>3</sup> furtivae Pyrria lanae,
 ut cum pilleolo soleas conviva tribulis. 15
 neu<sup>4</sup> volgo narres te sudavisse ferendo
 carmina, quae possint oculos aurisque morari Caesaris. oratus multa prece, nitere porro.
 vade ; vale ; cave ne titubes mandataque frangas.

<sup>1</sup> vinni or venni MSS. (but inscriptions favour the form Vinius). <sup>2</sup> urit E : urat Priscian.

<sup>3</sup> glomos φψλλ.

<sup>4</sup> neu a : nec E : ne, II.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the books. These, of course, could not be heavy in themselves, though they might make "heavy reading."

<sup>b</sup> This is said to be an allusion to a scene in one of the plays of Titinius.

<sup>c</sup> The tribulis, a humble man whom for political purposes a richer member of the same tribe has invited to dinner, has

EPISTLE XIII

As I instructed you often and at length, when you set out, Vinius, you will deliver these close-sealed rolls to Augustus, if he's well, if he's in good spirits, if—in fine—he asks for them; lest you blunder in your eagerness for me, and by officious service and excessive zeal bring resentment on my poor works. If haply my book's burden gall you with its weight, fling it from you, rather than savagely dash down your pack<sup>a</sup> where you are bidden to deliver it, and turn your father's name of Asina into a jest, and you become the talk of the town.

Put forth your strength over hills, streams, and fens; when once you have achieved your purpose and reached your journey's end, you are to keep your burden so placed as not, for instance, to carry the little packet of books under your armpit, even as a bumpkin carries a lamb, as tipsy Pyrria a ball of stolen wool,<sup>b</sup> as a poor tribesman his slippers and felt cap, when asked out to dinner.<sup>c</sup> And mind you don't tell all the world that you have sweated in carrying verses that may win a hold on the eyes and ears of Caesar. Though besought by many a plea,<sup>d</sup> press on. Be off; fare well; take care you do not stumble and smash your precious charge.

<sup>a</sup> no slave to take his cap and sandals, which he would need coming and going, though not in the dining-room.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. by inquisitive people.

XIV

TO THE BAILIFF OF HIS FARM

THIS epistle is professedly addressed to the slave, whom the poet had promoted from low rank in his town establishment to the position of bailiff or superintendent of his small country estate. The slave now hankers after city life, while the master, detained in Rome by a friend's bereavement, longs for the country, which he has always preferred. The difference between the two is due to their tastes. The slave still clings to his follies; the master has learned wisdom with advancing years.

The theme is essentially the same as in Epistles viii. and x. of this book, while the setting of the letter is in marked contrast with Sat. ii. 7, where it is the slave who lectures the master.

XIV.

Vilice silvarum et mihi me reddentis agelli, quem tu fastidis, habitatum quinque focis et quinque bonos solitum Variam dimittere patres, certemus, spinas animone ego fortius an tu
evellas agro, et melior sit Horatius an res. 5

Me quamvis Lamiae pietas et cura moratur, fratrem maerentis, raptō de fratre dolentis
insolabiliter, tamen istuc mens animusque
fert et amat spatiis obstantia rumpere claustra.
rure ego viventem, tu dicis in urbe beatum. 10
cui placet alterius, sua nimirum est odio sors.<sup>1</sup> stultus uterque locum immeritum causatur inique :
in culpa est animus, qui se non effugit umquam.

Tu mediastinus tacita prece rura petebas,
nunc urbem et ludos et balnea vilicus optas : 15
me constare mihi scis et discedere tristem
quandocumque trahunt invisa negotia Romam.
non eadem miramur ; eo disconvenit inter meque et te. nam quae<sup>2</sup> deserta et inhospita tesqua credis, amoena vocat mecum qui sentit, et odit 20

<sup>1</sup> res E.

<sup>2</sup> quae E, II : qua Va.

---

<sup>a</sup> These were probably coloni, who held their land in lease under Horace. They would go to Varia (now Vicovaro) to market and for local elections.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Epist. i. ii. 27 and Odes ii. 16. 19.

EPISTLE XIV

Bailiff of my woods and of the little farm which makes me myself again—while you disdain it, though the home of five households and wont to send to Varia their five honest heads<sup>a</sup>—let us have a match to see whether I more stoutly root out thorns from the mind or you from the land, and whether Horace or his farm is in a better state.

<sup>6</sup> For me, though kept here by the love and grief of Lamia, who is sighing for his brother, grieving for his lost brother inconsolably, yet thither thought and feeling bear me longing to burst the barriers that block the track. I call him happy who lives in the country; you him who dwells in the city. One who likes another's lot, of course dislikes his own. Each is foolish and unfairly blames the undeserving place; what is at fault is the mind, which never escapes from itself.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>14</sup> You, as a common drudge, used to sigh in secret for the country; now as a bailiff you long for the town, its games and baths: as for me, you know that I'm consistent with myself, and depart in gloom, whenever hateful business drags me to Rome. Our tastes are not the same: therein lies the difference between you and me. What you hold to be desert and inhospitable wilds, he who shares my views calls

HORACE

quae tu pulchra putas. fornix tibi et uncta popina incutiunt urbis desiderium, video, et quod angulus iste feret piper et tus ocius uva, nec vicina subest vinum praeberet taberna
 quae possit<sup>1</sup> tibi, nec meretrix tibicina, cuius 25
 ad strepitum salias terrae gravis ; et tamen urges iampridem non tacta ligonibus arva bovemque disiunctum curas et strictis frondibus exples ;
 addit opus pigro rivus, si decedit imber,
 multa mole docendus aprico parcere prato. 30

Nunc age, quid nostrum concentum<sup>2</sup> dividat audi.
 quem tenues decuere togae nitidique capilli,
 quem scis immunem Cinarae placuisse rapaci,
 quem bibulum liquidi media de luce Falerni,
 cena brevis iuvat et prope rivum somnus in herba ; 35
 nec lusisse pudet, sed non incidere ludum.
 non istic obliquo oculo mea commoda quisquam
 limat, non odio obscuro morsuque venenat :
 rident vicini glaebas et saxa moventem.
 cum servis urbana diaria<sup>3</sup> rodere mavis ; 40
 horum tu in numerum voto ruis ; invidet usum
 lignorum et pecoris tibi calo argutus et horti.
 optat ephippia bos, piger optat arare caballus.
 quam scit uterque libens censebo exerceat artem.

<sup>1</sup> possit E, II : posset aR.

<sup>2</sup> consensum E.

<sup>3</sup> cibaria R Goth.

---

<sup>a</sup> In the mouth of the bailiff, angulus is a term of contempt. The same expression, however, is used elsewhere by Horace of a place unique in his affections, " ille terrarum mihi praeter omnis angulus ridet " (Odes ii. 6. 13).

<sup>b</sup> i.e. although you have no pleasures. From l. 22 to l. 30 Horace repeats some of the grumbling remarks of the bailiff.

lovely, and hates what you believe so beautiful. the brothel, I see, and greasy cookshop that stinks ... you a longing for the city, and the fact that that poky spot<sup>a</sup> will grow pepper and spice as soon as grapes, and that there is no tavern hard by that can supply you with wine and no flute-playing courtesan, to whose strumming you can dance and thump the ground. And yet<sup>b</sup> you toil over fields long untouched by the hoe, you care for the ox after he is unyoked, and you fill him up with fodder you have stripped ; when you are dead tired, the brook brings fresh work, for if rain has fallen, it must be taught by many a mounded dam to spare the sunny meadow.

<sup>31</sup> Now come, hear what makes the discord in our common song. One whom fine-spun clothes became, and shining locks, one who, as you know, though empty-handed, found favour with greedy Cinara, and in midday hours would drink the clear Falernian, now takes pleasure in a simple meal, and a nap on the grass beside the stream : nor is it shameful to have once been foolish, but not to cut folly short. Where you live, no one with eye askance detracts from<sup>c</sup> my comforts, or poisons them with the bite of secret hate. As I move sods and stones the neighbours laugh. You would rather be munching rations with the slaves in town ; it is their number you fain would join : my sharp-witted groom envies you the use of fuel, flock, and garden. The ox longs for the horse's trappings : the horse, when lazy, longs to plough. What I shall advise is that each contentedly practise the trade he understands.

<sup>c</sup> The verb limat (lit. "files away"), as used with obliquo oculo, involves a play upon limis oculis (cf. Sat. ii. 5. 53).

XV

TO VALA

ORDERED by his physician to take the cold-water cure, Horace writes to his friend Vala for information about two seaside places, Velia and Salernum, especially as to the climate, people, drinking water, game, and fish. As such an interest in personal luxuries may seem quite inconsistent with doctrines he has often preached, Horace humorously admits that he is like the well-known Maenius, who would loudly proclaim the blessings of a simple life, but, if he had the chance, would indulge his appetite to the full.

The opening paragraph (1-25) is loosely framed, with lengthy parentheses, giving an air of careless freedom of style, after the fashion of conversation in real life. Numonius Vala, who had a country house in southern Italy, belonged to a family of some distinction in Lucania, as is evidenced by coins and inscriptions.

XV.

Quae sit hiems Veliae, quod caelum, Vala, Salerni, quorum hominum regio et qualis via (nam mihi Baias Musa supervacuas Antonius, et tamen illis me facit invisum, gelida cum perluor unda per medium frigus. sane murteta relinqui 5
 dictaque cessantem nervis elidere morbum
 sulfura contemni vicus gemit, invidus aegris,
 qui caput et stomachum supponere fontibus audent
 Clusinis<sup>1</sup> Gabiosque petunt et frigida rura.
 mutandus locus est et deversoria<sup>2</sup> nota 10
 praeteragendus equus. "quo tendis? non mihi Cumas est iter aut Baias," laeva stomachosus habena dicet<sup>3</sup> eques; sed equi frenato<sup>4</sup> est auris in ore);
 maior utrum populum frumenti copia pascat;
 collectosne bibant imbres puteosne perennis 15
 iugis<sup>5</sup> aquae (nam vina nihil moror illius orae:
 rure meo possum quidvis perferre patique;
 ad mare cum veni, generosum et lene requiro,
 quod curas abigat, quod cum spe divite manet
 in venas animumque meum, quod verba ministret, 20 quod me Lucanae iuvenem commendet<sup>6</sup> amicae);

<sup>1</sup> Clusinos VE.

<sup>2</sup> diversoria ERφψ.

<sup>3</sup> dicit E.

<sup>4</sup> equis frenato π.

<sup>5</sup> dulcis VE.

<sup>6</sup> commendat αR.

<sup>a</sup> Baiae was famous for its hot sulphur baths, but Musa has prescribed the cold-water treatment, which is not to be had there.

EPISTLE XV

What's the winter like, my Vala, at Velia, what's the climate at Salernum, what sort of people live there, what kind of road is it—for Antonius Musa makes Baiae useless to me, and yet<sup>a</sup> puts me in ill favour there, now that in midwinter I drench myself in cold water. Of course the town murmurs at its myrtle-groves being deserted, and its sulphur baths despised, so famous for driving a lingering disorder from the sinews, and takes offence at invalids who dare to plunge head and stomach under the showers from Clusium's springs, or who repair to Gabii and its cold country-side. I must change my resort, and drive my horse past the familiar lodgings. "Where are you going? I'm not bound for Cumae or Baiae"; so will the rider say as he tugs in anger at the left rein—but the horse's ear is in its bridled mouth<sup>b</sup>—which town has the better supply of food, do they drink rain-water from tanks, or have they spring-water, welling forth all the year—(for that region's wines I put out of court: in my country home I can stand and suffer anything; but when I go to the seaside I need something generous and mellow, to drive care away, to flow with rich hope into veins and heart, to find me a flow of words, and to give me the grace of youth with the ladies of Lucania)—

<sup>b</sup> The rider might have spared his words, for the horse is guided only by the bit.

HORACE

tractus uter pluris lepores, uter educet apros ;
 utra magis piscis et echinos aequora celent,
 pinguis ut inde domum possim Phaeaxque reverti, scribere te nobis, tibi nos accredere par est. 25

<sup>1</sup>Maenius, ut rebus maternis atque paternis
 fortiter absumptis urbanus coepit haberi scurra vagus, non qui certum praesepe teneret, impransus non qui civem dinosceret hoste,
 quaelibet in quemvis opprobria fingere saevus,<sup>2</sup> 30
 pernicies et tempestas barathrumque macelli, quidquid quaesierat, ventri donabat<sup>3</sup> avaro.
 hic ubi nequitiae fautoribus et timidis nil
 aut paulum abstulerat, patinas cenabat omasi, vilis et agninae,<sup>4</sup> tribus ursis quod satis esset ; 35
 scilicet ut ventres lamna candente nepotum diceret urendos correctus<sup>5</sup> Bestius. idem, quidquid erat nactus praedae maioris, ubi omne verterat<sup>6</sup> in fumum et cinerem, " non hercule miror," aiebat, " si qui comedunt bona, cum sit obeso 40
 nil melius turdo, nil vulva pulchrius ampla."

Nimirum hic ego sum. nam tuta et parvola laudo, cum res deficiunt, satis inter vilia fortis<sup>7</sup> :
 verum ubi quid melius contingit et unctius, idem vos sapere et solos aio<sup>8</sup> bene vivere, quorum 45
 conspicitur nitidis fundata pecunia villis.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Here a new Epistle begins in all important MSS. except a.

<sup>2</sup> certus two Bland.

<sup>3</sup> donarat V, II : donaret Bentley.

<sup>4</sup> agnini aλ.

<sup>5</sup> correptus ER : corrector Lambinus.

<sup>6</sup> verteret E.

<sup>7</sup> In a ll. 43-44 follow 39 ; in π they follow 38.

<sup>8</sup> alio φψ.

<sup>9</sup> vallis φψ.

---

<sup>a</sup> As if he were one of the Alcinoi iuventus of Epist. i. 2. 28.

<sup>b</sup> The language is Plautine. Where food was concerned, he swept everything before him.

which country rears more hares, which, more boars, which one's seas give more hiding to fish and sea-urchins, so that I may return home from there a fat Phaeacian <sup>a</sup>—all this you must write us, and we must credit you in full.

<sup>26</sup> Maenius gallantly used up all his mother and father had left him, then came into note as a city wit, a parasite at large, with no fixed fold, a man who when dinnerless knew not friend apart from foe, but would savagely trump up scandal against anybody, the market's ruin, a cyclone and abyss <sup>b</sup>—and so, whatever he gained, he gave to his greedy maw. This fellow, whenever he got little or nothing from those who applauded or feared his wicked wit, would sup on plates of tripe and cheap lamb, enough to satisfy three bears, so as actually to proclaim that prodigals should have their bellies branded with white-hot iron—he, a Bestius reformed! <sup>c</sup> Yet the same man, if he ever got hold of some larger booty, would turn it into smoke and ashes, and then, “In faith, I don't wonder,” he would say, “if some devour their substance, since there is nothing better than a fat thrush, nothing finer than a large sow's paunch.”

<sup>42</sup> Such a man, in truth, am I. When means fail, I cry up a safe and lowly lot, resolute enough where all is paltry: but when something better and richer comes my way I, the same man, say that only men like you are wise and live well <sup>d</sup>—whose invested wealth is displayed in garish villas.

<sup>e</sup> Nothing is known about Bestius, but he may well have been what Maenius was, a figure in Lucilius. According to Acron, he was severely frugal. Presumably he had been a spendthrift in earlier life. The corrector of Lambinus would give good sense, Bestius being an example of the rake in the pulpit.

<sup>d</sup> For bene vivere cf. Epist. i. 6. 56; i. 11. 29.

XVI

TO QUINCTIUS

THE Quinctius addressed may be Quinctius Hirpinus of Odes ii. 11. He is evidently a prominent man (l. 18), who is perhaps in public office (ll. 33. 34), but nothing definite is known about him. The Epistle is the poet's commentary on the second Stoic paradox, ὅτι αὐτάρκης ἡ ἀρετὴ πρὸς εὐδαιμονίαν (Cic. Parad. 2).

To save you the trouble of asking about the products of my estate, my dear Quinctius, let me describe it to you. It lies in a valley among the hills, gets plenty of sun, has a good climate, grows an abundance of wild fruit and foliage, and possesses a copious spring of fresh water. In this charming retreat I enjoy good health even in the worst season of the year (1-16).

And now about yourself. Are you really the good and happy man that people think you are? Remember that popular applause is fickle, and often insincere, and that those who give titles can also take them away (17-40).

Well, who is the "good" man? The world will answer that it is he who keeps the laws, whose word is a bond and whose testimony is trusted, but those who live near him may know better. Such a man,

EPISTLES, I. xvi.

eager to seem good, but not to be good, may be no better than the slave, who refrains from stealing merely from fear of being found out (40-62).

The man who has set his heart on money is a creature of desires and fears. He is a deserter from the cause of Virtue. You might treat him as a prisoner or put him to death, yet he may make a useful slave (63-72).

No, the truly good and wise man will be as fearless and independent as Dionysus in the play, for no misfortunes—not death itself—can daunt him (73-79).

XVI.

Ne perconteris, fundus meus, optime Quincti,
arvo pascat erum an baxis opulentet olivae, pomisne an pratis<sup>1</sup> an amicta<sup>2</sup> vitibus ulmo,
scribetur tibi forma loquaciter et situs agri.

Continui montes, ni<sup>3</sup> dissocientur opaca 5
valle, sed ut veniens dextrum latus aspiciat sol, laevum discedens<sup>4</sup> curru<sup>5</sup> fugiente vaporet.
temperiem laudes. quid si<sup>6</sup> rubicunda benigni<sup>7</sup>
cornu vepres et pruna ferant? si<sup>8</sup> quercus et ilex multa fruge pecus, multa dominum iuuet umbra? 10
dicas adductum propius frondere Tarentum.
fons etiam rivo dare nomen idoneus, ut nec
frigidior Thracam nec purior ambiat Hebrus, infirmo capiti fluit utilis, utilis<sup>9</sup> alvo.
hae latebrae dulces, etiam, si credis, amoenae, 15
incolumem tibi me praestant Septembribus horis.

<sup>1</sup> an pratis E Goth.: et pratis most MSS.

<sup>2</sup> amica E.

<sup>3</sup> si aE (sci A<sup>2</sup>). The lemma of Porph. gives si but the note supports ni.

<sup>4</sup> descendens  $\pi$ : decedens Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> cursu V.

<sup>6</sup> quod si a. <sup>7</sup> benignae.

<sup>8</sup> si omitted by a; et (for si)  $\pi$ .

<sup>9</sup> aptus et utilis A<sup>2</sup>Rπφ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Ancient husbandry was chiefly concerned with five products, viz. grain, oil, fruit, cattle, and wine.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the valley of the Digentia (see Epist. i. 18. 104),

EPISTLE XVI

Lest you, my good Quinctius, should have to ask me about my farm, whether it supports its master with plough-land, or makes him rich with olives, whether with apples or with meadows or vine-clad elms,<sup>a</sup> I will describe for you in rambling style the nature and lie of the land.

<sup>5</sup> There are hills, quite unbroken, were they not cleft by one shady valley,<sup>b</sup> yet such that the rising sun looks on its right side, and when departing in his flying car warms the left. The climate would win your praise. What if you knew that the bushes bear a rich crop of ruddy cornels and plums, that oak and ilex gladden the cattle with plenteous fruitage, and their lord with plenteous shade? You would say that Tarentum with its verdure was brought nearer home. A spring, too, fit to give its name to a river, so that not cooler nor purer is Hebrus winding through Thrace, flows with healing for sickly heads and sickly stomachs. This retreat, so sweet—yes, believe me, so bewitching—keeps me, my friend, in sound health in September's heat.

now called Licenza. Kiessling prefers the rival reading si dissociantur, with temperiem laudes the main clause in a conditional sentence, meaning: "if you picture a mass of hills broken by a valley, you may imagine how pleasant the climate is."

HORACE

Tu recte vivis, si curas esse quod audis.
iactamus iam pridem omnis te Roma beatum ;
sed vereor ne cui de te plus quam tibi credas,
neve putes alium sapiente bonoque beatum, 20
neu, si te populus sanum recteque valentem dictitet, occultam febrem sub tempus<sup>1</sup> edendi dissimules, donec manibus tremor incidat unctis.
stultorum incurata pudor malus ulcera celat.

Si quis bella tibi terra pugnata marique 25
dicat et his verbis vacuas permulceat auris :
“ tene magis salvum populus velit an populum tu,
servet in ambiguo, qui consulit et tibi et urbi, Iuppiter,” Augusti laudes agnoscere possis*:
cum pateris<sup>2</sup> sapiens emendatusque vocari, 30
respondesne tuo, dic sodes, nomine ? “ nempe vir bonus et prudens dici delector ego ac tu.”
qui dedit hoc hodie, cras, si volet, auferet, ut<sup>3</sup> si detulerit fasces indigno, detrahet<sup>4</sup> idem.
“ pone, meum est ” inquit : pono tristisque recedo. 35
idem si clamet furem, neget esse pudicum,
contendat laqueo collum pressisse paternum,
mordear opprobriis falsis mutemque colores ?
falsus honor iuvat et mendax infamia terret
quem nisi mendosum et medicandum<sup>5</sup> ?

<sup>1</sup> pectus *aR*π.

<sup>2</sup> pateris Porph. : poteris aR : cupias E.

<sup>3</sup> aut.

<sup>4</sup> detrahat R.

<sup>5</sup> mendicandum lπ : mendacem Ma (corrected).

---

* The ancients ate with their fingers.

† According to the scholiasts the verses cited are from the “ Panegyric on Augustus ” by Varius, Virgil's great friend.

<sup>17</sup> And you—you live the true life, if you take care to be what people call you. All we in Rome have long talked of you as happy ; but I fear, as touching yourself, that you may give more credit to others than to your own judgement, or that you may think someone other than the wise and good man can be happy ; or that, if over and over men say you are in sound and good health, you may, toward the dinner-hour, disguise the hidden fever, until a trembling falls upon your greasy hands.<sup>a</sup> Fools, through false shame, hide the unhealed sore.

<sup>25</sup> Suppose a man were to speak of wars fought by you on land and sea, and with words like these flatter your attentive ears :

May He, to whom both thou and Rome are dear,
Keep secret still, which is the fuller truth,
The love of Rome for thee, or thine for her !

you would see in them the praises of Augustus.<sup>b</sup> When you suffer yourself to be called wise and flawless, do you answer, pray tell me, in your own name ? “ To be sure, I like to be called a good man and wise, even as you do.” But they who gave you this title to-day will, if they so please, take it away to-morrow ; even as, if they bestow the lictor’s rods on one unworthy, they will likewise wrest them from him. “ Put that down, ’tis ours,” they say. I do so, and sadly withdraw. If the same people were to cry after me “ Thief !”, call me “ Profligate,” insist that I strangled my father, ought I to be stung by such lying charges, and change colour ? Whom does false honour delight, whom does lying calumny affright, save the man who is full of flaws and needs the doctor ?

HORACE

Vir bonus est quis ? 40

“ qui consulta patrum, qui leges iuraque servat, quo multae magnaeque secantur iudice lites, quo res sponsore<sup>1</sup> et quo causae teste tenentur.”
 sed videt hunc omnis domus et vicinia tota introrsum<sup>2</sup> turpem, speciosum pelle decora. 45 “ nec furtum feci nec fugi,” si mihi dicat<sup>3</sup>
 servus, “ habes pretium, loris non ureris,” aio.
 “ non hominem occidi ”: “ non pasces in cruce corvos.”
 “ sum bonus et frugi ”: renuit negitatque<sup>4</sup> Sabellus.
 cautus enim metuit foveam lupus accipiterque 50
 suspectos<sup>5</sup> laqueos et opertum milvus hamum.
 oderunt peccare boni virtutis amore.
 tu nihil admittes in te formidine poenae :
 sit spes fallendi, miscebis sacra profanis.
 nam de mille fabae modiis cum surripis unum, 55
 damnum est, non facinus, mihi pacto lenius isto.
 vir bonus, omne forum quem spectat et omne tribunal, quandocumque deos vel porco vel bove placat, “ Iane pater ! ” clare, clare cum dixit, “ Apollo ! ”
 labra movet metuens audiri : “ pulchra Laverna, 60
 da mihi fallere, da iusto sanctoque<sup>6</sup> videri, noctem peccatis et fraudibus obice nubem.”
 Qui melior servo, qui<sup>7</sup> liberior sit avarus,
 in triviis fixum cum se demittit<sup>8</sup> ob assem,

<sup>1</sup> res sponsore V: responsore MSS.

<sup>2</sup> introrsus π²: hunc prorsus, II.

<sup>3</sup> dicit.

<sup>4</sup> negitatque VE: negat atque a.

<sup>5</sup> suspectus M, II.

<sup>6</sup> iustum sanctumque φψλ.

<sup>7</sup> qui . . . qui V, I: quo . . . quo, II.

<sup>8</sup> demittit E: dimittit aM.

---

* Ll. 41-43 are the reply of the person addressed by the poet. This ought to be Quinctius, but the poet is now 354

EPISTLES, I. xvi. 40-64

<sup>40</sup> Who is the "good man"? "He who observes the Senate's decrees, the statutes and laws; whose judgement settles many grave suits; whose surety means safety for property; whose testimony wins suits at law."<sup>a</sup> Yet this very man all his household and all his neighbours see to be foul within, though fair without, under his comely skin. If a slave were to say to me, "I never stole or ran away": my reply would be, "You have your reward; you are not flogged." "I never killed anyone." "You'll hang on no cross to feed crows." "I am good and honest." Our Sabine friend<sup>b</sup> shakes his head and says, "No, no!" For the wolf is wary and dreads the pit, the hawk the suspected snare, the pike the covered hook. The good hate vice because they love virtue; you<sup>c</sup> will commit no crime because you dread punishment. Suppose there's a hope of escaping detection; you will make no difference between sacred and profane. For when from a thousand bushels of beans you steal one, my loss in that case is less, but not your sin. This "good man," for forum and tribunal the cynosure of every eye, whenever with swine or ox he makes atonement to the gods, cries with loud voice "Father Janus," with loud voice "Apollo," then moves his lips, fearing to be heard: "Fair Laverna,<sup>d</sup> grant me to escape detection; grant me to pass as just and upright, shroud my sins in night, my lies in clouds!"

<sup>63</sup> How the miser is better than a slave, or is more free, when he stoops at the cross-roads to pick up carrying on a dialogue with an imaginary interlocutor. So "tu" in l. 53.

<sup>b</sup> By Sabellus Horace means one of his honest Sabine neighbours.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. the slave.

<sup>d</sup> The goddess of theft.

HORACE

non video ; nam qui cupiet, metuet quoque ; porro, 65
 qui metuens vivet, liber mihi non erit umquam.
 perdidit arma, locum Virtutis deseruit, qui semper in augenda festinat et obruitur re.
 vendere cum possis captivum, occidere noli ;
 serviet utiliter ; sine pascat durus aretque, 70
 naviget ac mediis hiemet mercator in undis,
 annonae prosit, portet frumenta penusque.

Vir bonus et sapiens audebit dicere : “ Pentheu, rector Thebarum, quid me perferre patique
 indignum coges ? ”

“ Adimam bona.”

“ Nempe pecus, rem, 75

lectos, argentum : tollas licet.”

“ In manicis et

compedibus saevo te sub custode tenebo.”

“ Ipse deus, simul atque volam, me solvet.” opinor, hoc sentit “ moriar.” mors ultima linea rerum est.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> est omitted by E.

<sup>a</sup> We are told that Roman boys would solder a coin to the pavement and then ridicule those who tried to pick it up (so scholiast on Persius, v. 111).

<sup>b</sup> Such a man is really a slave, and should be treated as such.

<sup>c</sup> As opposed to the man called bonus in ll. 32 and 57.

<sup>d</sup> The dialogue following is paraphrased from Euripides, Bacchae, 492-8, a scene where the disguised Dionysus defies the copper fastened there.<sup>a</sup> I do not see : for he who covets will also have fears : further, he who lives in fear, will never, to my mind, be free. A man has lost his weapons, has quitted his post with Virtue, who is ever busied and lost in making money. When you can sell a captive,<sup>b</sup> don't kill him : he will make a useful slave. If hardy, let him be shepherd or ploughman : let him go to sea, and winter as a trader in the midst of the waves : let him help the market : let him carry food and fodder.

<sup>73</sup> The truly good and wise man<sup>c</sup> will have courage to say :<sup>d</sup> " Pentheus, lord of Thebes, what shame will you compel me to stand and suffer ? "

" I will take away your goods."

" You mean my cattle, my substance, couches, plate ? You may take them."

" I will keep you in handcuffs and fetters, under a cruel jailer."

" God himself, the moment I choose, will set me free." This, I take it, is his meaning : " I will die."<sup>e</sup> Death is the line that marks the end of all.<sup>f</sup>

Pentheus, king of Thebes. The latter, intent on suppressing the Bacchic worship, has made a prisoner of the Lydian stranger, who, being really a god, sets the king's threats at nought.

<sup>g</sup> The moriar does not belong to the scene. The Stoics sanctioned suicide as an escape from life's evils.

<sup>h</sup> A chalk-line marked the goal in the race-course.

XVII

TO SCAEVA

THE subject of this and the following Epistle is personal independence, as illustrated in the relations of patron and protégé. Horace's own happy connexion with Maecenas, which he sets forth so admirably in Epist. i. 7, furnished him with an experience which possibly led others to seek his advice as to their conduct toward men of high station. As to Scaeva, however, nothing is known about him, and it is quite possible that there was no such person in real life, but that the name was chosen to fit an assumed character, it being the same as σκαιός, "awkward" or "gauche."

After disclaiming any peculiar right to give advice on such a subject (1-5), and assuring Scaeva that if he really wants to live a quiet, comfortable life, he should retire from Rome altogether (6-10), Horace proceeds in reality to defend himself against the attacks made on him as a sycophant of the great. He therefore contrasts the conduct of the Cyrenaic Aristippus, who had plenty of savoir faire and could adapt himself to any circumstances, with the less sensible behaviour of Diogenes, the boorish Cynic, who courted the common people and knew how to live only amid sordid surroundings (13-32). To gain distinction in life oneself is the highest ambition, but it is also no mean achievement to win favour with the great. He who succeeds in doing so is a true man and plays a manly part (33-42).

EPISTLES, I. xvii.

Here the tone abruptly changes, and in the last twenty lines (43-62) Horace lays down rules which the young aspirant for favour is supposed to follow. In this part the poet is far from serious, but, after his fashion, is indulging in good-natured irony.

XVII.

Quamvis, Scaeva, satis per te tibi consulis et scis,
quo tandem pacto deceat maioribus uti, disce, docendus adhuc quae censet amicus, ut si
caecus iter monstrare velit ; tamen aspice si quid et nos, quod cures proprium fecisse, loquamur. 5

Si te grata quies et primam somnus in horam
delectat, si te pulvis strepitusque rotarum, si laedit<sup>1</sup> caupona, Ferentinum ire iubebo.
nam neque divitibus contingunt gaudia solis,
nec vixit male, qui natus moriensque fefellit. 10
si prodesse tuis pauloque benignius ipsum
te tractare voles, accedes siccus ad unctum.<sup>2</sup>

“ Si pranderet holus patienter, regibus uti nollet Aristippus.” “ si sciret regibus uti, fastidiret holus qui me notat.” utrius horum 15
verba probes et facta doce, vel iunior audi
cur sit Aristippi potior sententia. namque
mordacem Cynicum sic eludebat, ut aiunt :

<sup>1</sup> laedet a M, II.

<sup>2</sup> ad unctum Porph. mss. : inunctum V : adinunctum E.

---

<sup>a</sup> A quiet country town in the Alban region of Latium, according to Professor W. B. M'Daniel (A.P.A. xliii. pp. 67 ff.).

<sup>b</sup> According to the Epicurean precept, λάθε βιώσας.

<sup>c</sup> This remark is made by Diogenes the Cynic. The story referred to is found in Diogenes Laertius, ii. 8. 68. The Cynic was cleaning vegetables for dinner, when Aristippus passed by. Said the former: “ if you had learned to put up 360

EPISTLE XVII

Even though, Scaeva, you look after your own interests quite wisely by yourself, though you know on what terms, in fine, one should handle greater folk, yet learn the views of your humble friend, who still needs some teaching. It is as if a blind man sought to show the way; yet see whether even I have aught to say, which you may care to make your own.

<sup>6</sup> If pleasant ease and sleep till sunrise be your delight, if dust and noise of wheels, or if tavern offend you, I shall order you off to Ferentinum.<sup>a</sup> For joys fall not to the rich alone, and he has not lived amiss who from birth to death has passed unknown.<sup>b</sup> But if you wish to help your friends and to treat yourself a little more generously, you in your hunger will make for a rich table.

<sup>13</sup> "If Aristippus could be content to dine on greens, he would not want to live with princes."<sup>c</sup> "If he who censures me knew how to live with princes, he would sniff at greens." Of these two sages tell me whose words and deeds you approve; or, since you are the younger, hear why the view of Aristippus is the better. For this is the way, as the story goes, that he dodged the snapping cynic: "I with this, you would not be courting princes." To this gibe Aristippus replied, "and you, if you knew how to consort with men, would not be cleaning greens."

HORACE

“ scurror ego ipse mihi, populo tu ; rectius<sup>1</sup> hoc et splendidius multo est. equus ut me portet, alat rex, officium facio ; tu poscis vilia, verum<sup>2</sup> 21

dante minor, quamvis fers te nullius egentem.”
omnis Aristippum decuit color et status et res,
temptantem maiora, fere praesentibus aequum.
contra, quem duplici panno patientia velat, 25
mirabor, vitae via si conversa decebit.

alter purpureum non exspectabit amictum,
quidlibet indutus celeberrima per loca<sup>3</sup> vadet, personamque feret non inconcinnus utramque ;
alter Miletī textam cane peius et angui 30
vitabit<sup>4</sup> chlamydem, morietur frigore, si non rettuleris pannum. refer et sine vivat ineptus.

Res gerere et captos ostendere civibus hostis
attingit solium Iovis et caelestia temptat :
principibus placuisse viris non ultima laus est. 35
non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum. •
sedit qui timuit, ne non succederet.

“ Esto.

quid, qui pervenit,<sup>5</sup> fecitne viriliter ? ” atqui hic est aut nusquam, quod quaerimus. hic onus horret, ut parvis animis et parvo corpore maius ; 40

<sup>1</sup> regibus φψ.

<sup>2</sup> verum or verum es, I, II : rerum (to be taken with vilia)
only inferior MSS.

<sup>3</sup> iocā, II.

<sup>4</sup> vitavit aM.

<sup>5</sup> pervenerit, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> Scurror means “ play the scurra.” In effect, Diogenes had taunted him with being a parasite.

<sup>b</sup> The cloak worn by the Cynics is called pannus in contempt. They wore no under-garment, but doubled the cloak instead. Hence it was called διπλοῖς.

<sup>c</sup> The poet refers in a general way to the triumphal career of Augustus.

play the buffoon<sup>a</sup> for my own profit, you for the people's. My conduct is better and nobler by far. I do service that I may have a horse to ride and be fed by a prince : you sue for paltry doles ; but you become inferior to the giver, though you pose as needing no man." To Aristippus every form of life was fitting, every condition and circumstance ; he aimed at higher things, but as a rule was content with what he had. On the other hand, take the man whom endurance clothes with its double rags<sup>b</sup> : I shall marvel if a changed mode of life befit him. The one will not wait for a purple mantle ; he will put on anything and walk through the most crowded streets, and in no inelegant fashion will play either part. The other will shun a cloak woven at Miletus as worse than a dog or a snake, and will die of cold if you do not give him back his rags. Give them back and let him live on, the uncouth fellow.

<sup>33</sup> To achieve great deeds and to display captive foemen to one's fellow-citizens is to touch the throne of Jove and to scale the skies.<sup>c</sup> Yet to have won favour with the foremost men is not the lowest glory. It is not every man's lot to get to Corinth.<sup>d</sup> He who feared he might not win sat still.<sup>e</sup>

Be it so—what of him who reached the goal ? Did he play the man ? Nay, but here or nowhere is what we look for. One dreads the burden as too big for his small soul and small body : another lifts

<sup>a</sup> A rendering of the Greek proverb, Οὐ παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἐς Κόρινθον ἔσθ' ὁ πλοῦς, which originally referred to the great expense of a self-indulgent life at Corinth. Here, however, the application is very different, viz. that not everyone can gain the prize of virtue.

<sup>e</sup> i.e. never entered the race.

HORACE

hic subit et perfert. aut virtus nomen inane est,
aut decus et pretium recte petit experiens vir.

Coram rege sua<sup>1</sup> de paupertate tacentes
plus poscente ferent<sup>2</sup>: distat, sumasne pudenter an rapias; atqui rerum caput hoc erat, hic fons. 45
"indotata mihi soror est, paupercula mater, et fundus nec vendibilis nec pascere firmus," qui dicit, clamat, "victum date!" succinit alter,
"et mihi!" dividuo findetur munere quadra.
sed tacitus pasci si posset corvus, haberet 50
plus dapis et rixae multo minus invidiaeque.

Brundisium comes aut Surrentum ductus amoenum
qui queritur salebras et acerbum frigus et imbres, aut cistam effractam et subducta viatica plorat,
nota refert meretricis acumina, saepe catellam, 55
saepe periscelidem raptam sibi flentis, uti mox
nulla fides damnis verisque doloribus adsit.
nec semel irrisus triviis attollere curat fracto crure planum, licet illi plurima manet lacrima, per sanctum iuratus dicat Osirim: 60
"credite, non ludo; crudeles, tollite claudum!"
"quaere peregrinum," vicinia rauca reclamant.

<sup>1</sup> sua Bentley: suo MSS.

<sup>2</sup> ferunt E.

---

<sup>a</sup> In comedy the term rex is used by a parasite of his patron; cf. Plautus, Capt. 92; Terence, Phormio 338. So βασιλεύς in Greek comedy; cf. Meineke, fragm. p. 774 βασιλέως νὸν λέγεις ἀφίχθαι.

<sup>b</sup> Viz. getting as much as possible.

<sup>c</sup> As a result of so much begging no one gets a whole loaf.

it and carries it to the end. Either manhood is an empty name, or the man who makes the attempt justly aims at honour and reward.

<sup>43</sup> Those who in the presence of their patron <sup>a</sup> say nothing of their own need will get more than one who begs. It makes a difference whether you take modestly or snatch greedily. And yet this <sup>b</sup> was the head and front of all. "My sister has no dower, my poor mother is a beggar, my farm is neither salable nor able to support us." He who so speaks, cries aloud, "Give us food." His neighbour chimes in with "me too." So the gift will be divided and the morsel split.<sup>c</sup> But if the crow could feed in quiet, he would have more meat, and much less wrangling and envy.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>52</sup> The man who, when taken as companion to Brundisium or lovely Surrentum, grumbles about bad roads and bitter cold and rain, or moans over his box broken open and his stores pilfered, recalls the familiar tricks of a mistress who oft bewails a pretty chain, oft a stolen anklet, so that by and by her real losses and griefs win no belief. And he who has once been fooled does not care to lift up at the crossings a beggar with a broken leg, though many a tear flow down his cheeks, though he swear by holy Osiris and cry: "Believe me, I'm in earnest; cruel men, lift up the lame!" "Look for a stranger," the neighbours bawl back till they are hoarse.

<sup>4</sup> The crow's cawing calls other crows to share in the booty it has found.

XVIII

TO LOLLIUS

A true friend, Lollius, never plays the parasite, yet on the other hand never shows his independence by rudeness or by insistence upon trifles (1-20).

As protégé, you must not try to emulate your patron in his ostentation or other weaknesses, for you will merely earn his contempt or hatred. Neither should you pry into his secrets, though if he entrust any to you you must keep them faithfully (21-38).

Do not emphasize your own tastes in contrast with your patron's. If he wishes to go a-hunting, put your books aside, even as Amphion gave up the lyre to humour Zethus. The sport will whet your appetite ; it is a national pastime and you have always been a good athlete and soldier. You have been cheered on the Campus Martius, and crowds have witnessed your mimic reproduction of the Battle of Actium (39-66).

Be discreet in your criticism of others ; covet not your patron's slaves ; be careful to introduce only people who will not humiliate you later, but should you make a mistake, don't fail to acknowledge it, so that, if necessary, you may be able to defend those who really deserve your aid. Remember that some day you yourself may be bitten by the tooth of slander. A protégé, you see, must be ever watchful of his conduct. He must fall in with his patron's moods and at all times show a cheery face (67-95).

EPISTLES, I. XVIII.

Above all, you must study the words of the wise and learn the secret of a tranquil life. That is what I have found in my peaceful country home, where I pray the gods for the blessings of life, for the means of living, and for a goodly supply of books. The aequus animus I will see to myself (96-112).

This Epistle is addressed to the Lollius whom we have already met in the second Epistle of this book. Yet the main theme of the letter is the same as that already treated in the seventeenth, viz. the manner in which a person should conduct himself in his intercourse with the great. Lollius, however, is not what Scaeva is conceived to have been, poor and of lowly station. He has an ancestral estate, large enough to be the scene of an historical pageant, and he was probably the son of the Lollius who was Consul in 21 B.C. (cf. Epist. i. 20. 28).

It is commonly supposed that the young Lollius is thinking of attaching himself to a man of great prominence in the state, with whom he would be on terms of confidential intimacy (ll. 37 f. ; 68 ff.), and that he has consulted Horace, who has himself been so successful with a patron. But most commentators take the letter too seriously. It is a satire and the poet is in a playful mood (see e.g. ll. 72 ff.). So, under the guise of a Professor of Social Philosophy, he gives his young friend a lecture in Stoic fashion on his favourite theme bene vivere, which here may be taken to mean "How to get on in the world."

XVIII.

Si bene te novi, metues, liberrime Lolli, scurrantis speciem praebere, professus amicum.
 ut matrona meretrici dispar erit atque
 discolor, infido scurrae distabit amicus.
 est huic diversum vitio vitium prope maius, 5
 asperitas agrestis et inconcinna gravisque,
 quae se commendat tonsa cute, dentibus atris,
 dum volt libertas dici mera veraque virtus.
 virtus est medium vitiorum et utrimque<sup>1</sup> reductum.
 alter in obsequium plus aequo pronus et imi 10
 derisor lecti sic nutum divitis horret,
 sic iterat voces et verba cadentia tollit,
 ut puerum saevo credas dictata magistro
 reddere vel partis mimum tractare secundas.
 alter rixatur<sup>2</sup> de lana saepe caprina,<sup>3</sup> 15 propugnat nugis armatus : “ scilicet, ut non sit mihi prima fides, et vere quod placet ut non acriter elatrem ! pretium aetas altera sordet.”

<sup>1</sup> utrumque aR.

<sup>2</sup> rixatur MSS. : rixatus V : rixator Muretus.

<sup>3</sup> caprina et Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Epist. i. 17. 19 and note.

<sup>b</sup> μεσότης δύο κακιῶν (Arist. Nicomach. Eth. ii. 6).

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 8. 40 f., where the scurrae were with the host on the lowest couch.

EPISTLE XVIII

If I know you well, my Lollius, most outspoken of men, you will shrink from appearing in the guise of a parasite <sup>a</sup> when you have professed the friend. As matron and mistress will differ in temper and tone, so will the friend be distinct from the faithless parasite. There is a vice the opposite of this—perhaps a greater one—a clownish rudeness, awkward and offensive, which commends itself by shaggy skin and black teeth, while fain to pass for simple candour and pure virtue. Virtue is a mean between vices,<sup>b</sup> remote from both extremes. The one man, over-prone to servility, a jester of the lowest couch,<sup>c</sup> so reveres the rich man's nod, so echoes his speeches, and picks up his words as they fall, that you would think a schoolboy was repeating his lessons to a stern master or a mime-player acting a second part.<sup>d</sup> The other man wrangles often about goat's wool,<sup>e</sup> and donning his armour fights for trifles: "To think, forsooth, that I should not find credence first, or that I should not blurt out strongly what I really think! A second life were poor at such a

<sup>a</sup> In the mimes the actor playing second part commonly imitated the chief actor in word and gesture.

<sup>e</sup> The question whether the hair of goats could be called lana or wool, was proverbial for a matter of no importance.

HORACE

ambigitur quid enim? Castor sciat an Dolichos<sup>1</sup> plus:
Brundisium Minuci melius via ducat an Appi. 20

Quem damnosa Venus, quem praeceps alea nudat, gloria quem supra vires et vestit et unguet,
quem tenet argenti sitis importuna famesque,
quem paupertatis pudor et fuga, dives amicus,
saepe decem vitiis instructor, odit et horret, 25
aut, si non odit, regit ac veluti pia mater
plus quam se sapere et virtutibus esse priorem vult et ait prope vera: "meae (contendere noli)
stultitiam patiuntur opes; tibi parvola res est.
arta decet sanum comitem toga; desine mecum 30
certare." Eutrapelus, cuicumque nocere volebat, vestimenta dabat pretiosa: "beatus enim iam
cum pulchris tunicis sumet<sup>2</sup> nova consilia et spes, dormiet in lucem, scorto postponet honestum
officium, nummos alienos pascet, ad imum 35
Thraex erit aut holitoris aget<sup>3</sup> mercede caballum."

Arcanum neque tu scrutaberis illius<sup>4</sup> umquam, commissumque teges et vino tortus et ira.
nec tua laudabis studia aut aliena reprendes,<sup>5</sup>
nec, cum venari volet ille, poemata panges.<sup>6</sup> 40
gratia sic fratrum geminorum, Amphionis atque Zethi, dissiluit, donec suspecta severo conticuit lyra. fraternis cessisse putatur moribus Amphion: tu cede potentis amici

<sup>1</sup> docilis MSS.

<sup>2</sup> sumit E.

<sup>3</sup> aget E: agit aM.

<sup>4</sup> ullius MSS.

<sup>5</sup> rependes E.

<sup>6</sup> panges E.

<sup>a</sup> These were actors or gladiators.

<sup>b</sup> The story of how the brothers Zethus and Amphion quarrelled about the rival merits of music and hunting was set forth by Euripides in his Antiope, and was reproduced in a play of the same name by Pacuvius.

price.' Why, what's the question in dispute? Whether Castor or Dolichos<sup>a</sup> has more skill; which is the better road to Brundisium, that of Minucius or that of Appius!

<sup>21</sup> The man whom ruinous passion or desperate gambling strips bare, whom vanity dresses up and perfumes beyond his means, who is possessed by an insatiate hunger and thirst for money, by the shame and dread of poverty, his rich friend, though often ten times as well equipped with vices, hates and abhors; or if he does not hate him schools him and like a fond mother would have him wiser and more virtuous than himself. He says to him what is pretty nearly true: "My wealth—don't try to rival me—allows of folly: your means are but trifling. A narrow toga befits a client of sense; cease to vie with me." Eutrapelus, if he wished to injure someone, would give him costly clothes: "for now," said he, "the happy fellow will, together with his fine tunics, put on new plans and hopes, will sleep till dawn, will postpone honest business for a wanton, will swell his debts, and at last will become a gladiator, or the hired driver of a greengrocer's nag."

<sup>37</sup> You will never pry into your patron's secrets, and if one is entrusted to you, you will keep it, though wine or anger puts you on the rack. Again, you will neither praise your own tastes, nor find fault with those of others, nor when your friend would go a-hunting, will you be penning poems. 'Twas so that the brotherly bond between the twins Amphion and Zethus parted asunder, till the lyre, on which the stern one looked askance, was hushed.<sup>b</sup> Amphion, 'tis thought, yielded to his brother's mood: do you yield to your great friend's gentle biddings;

lenibus imperiis, quotiensque educet<sup>1</sup> in agros 45
 Aetolis<sup>2</sup> onerata plagis iumenta canesque, surge et inhumanae senium deponere Camenae,
 cenes ut pariter pulmenta laboribus empta :
 Romanis sollemne viris opus, utile famae
 vitaeque et membris ; praesertim cum valeas et 50
 vel cursu superare canem vel viribus aprum
 possis. adde virilia quod speciosius arma non est qui tractet ; scis, quo clamore coronae proelia sustineas campestria ; denique saevam militiam puer et Cantabrica bella tulisti 55
 sub duce qui templis Parthorum signa refigit nunc et, si quid abest, Italis<sup>3</sup> adiudicat armis.<sup>4</sup> Ac ne te retrahas et inexcusabilis absis, quamvis nil extra numerum fecisse modumque
 curas, interdum nugaris rure paterno : 60
 partitur lintres exercitus, Actia pugna te duce per pueros hostili more<sup>5</sup> refertur ;
 adversarius est frater, lacus Hadria, donec
 alterutrum velox Victoria fronde coronet.
 consentire suis studiis qui crediderit te, 65
 fautor utroque tuum laudabit pollice ludum.

<sup>1</sup> educit M : ducit or ducet, II.

<sup>2</sup> Aeoliis van Vliet.

<sup>3</sup> abest aliis π.

<sup>4</sup> arvis Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> mole E.

* Probably a literary epithet, reminding the reader of the mythical boar-hunt of Meleager in Calydon. The conjectural Aeoliis is explained as equivalent to Cumanis, because flax, which made strong nets (Pliny, N.H. xix. 1. 10), grew near Cumae, a colony from Cyme in Aeolia.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. "tu pulmentaria quaere sudando," Sat. ii. 2. 20.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 2. 10 f., where hunting is called Romana militiā.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. the sports of the Campus Martius.

* In 20 B.C. Augustus recovered from the Parthians by and when he takes out into the country his mules laden with Aetolian <sup>a</sup> nets, and his dogs, up with you and cast aside the glumness of your unsocial Muse, that you may share his supper with a relish, whereof toil has been the price <sup>b</sup>—'tis the wonted pastime of the heroes of Rome, <sup>c</sup> is good for fame as well as for life and limb—especially when you are in health, and can outdo either the hound in speed or the boar in strength. Add that there is none who more gracefully handles manly weapons : you know how loudly the ring cheers when you uphold the combats of the Campus. <sup>d</sup> In fine, while a mere youth, you served in a hard campaign, and in the Cantabrian wars, under a captain who even now is taking down our standards from the Parthian temples <sup>e</sup> and, if aught is still beyond our sway, is assigning it to the arms of Italy.

<sup>58</sup> Further, that you may not draw back and stand aloof without excuse, bear in mind that, however much you take care to do nothing out of time and tune, you do sometimes amuse yourself at your father's country-seat : your troops divide the skiffs <sup>f</sup> ; with you as captain, the Actian fight is presented by your slaves in true foemen's style ; opposing you is your brother, the lake is the Adriatic ; till winged Victory crowns with leafage one or the other chieftain. He who believes that you fall in with his pursuits will with both thumbs <sup>g</sup> eagerly commend your sport.

treaty the standards they had taken from Crassus ; cf. Epist. i. 12. 28.

<sup>f</sup> In a sham fight on their father's estate, Lollius and his brother have represented the famous battle of Actium.

<sup>g</sup> A reference to the way in which the audience in the amphitheatre expressed approval. The precise form of the gesture referred to is doubtful.

HORACE

Protinus ut moneam (si quid monitoris eges tu)
 quid de quoque viro et cui dicas, saepe videto.
 percontatorem fugito : nam garrulus idem est, 70
 nec retinent patulae commissa fideliter aures,
 et semel emissum volat irrevocabile verbum.
 non ancilla tuum iecur ulceret ulla puerve
 intra marmoreum venerandi limen amici, ne dominus pueri<sup>1</sup> pulchri caraeve puellae munere te parvo beet aut incommodus angat. 75
 qualem commendes, etiam atque etiam aspice, ne mox
 incutiant aliena tibi peccata pudorem.
 fallimur et quondam non dignum tradimus : ergo
 quem sua culpa premet, deceptus omitte tueri, ut penitus notum, si temptent crimina, serves 80 tuterisque tuo fidentem<sup>2</sup> praesidio : qui dente Theonino cum circumroditur, ecquid<sup>3</sup>
 ad te post paulo ventura pericula sentis ?
 nam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet,
 et neglecta solent incendia sumere vires. 85

Dulcis inexpertis cultura potentis amici :
 expertus metuit.<sup>4</sup> tu, dum tua navis in alto est,
 hoc age, ne mutata retrorsum te ferat aura.
 oderunt hilarem tristes tristemque iocosi,
 sedatum celeres, agilem navumque remissi ; 90
 poterès [bibuli media de nocte Falerni<sup>5</sup>
 oderunt] porrecta negantem pocula, quamvis nocturnos iures te formidare tepores.

<sup>1</sup> pueri dominus E, lemma in Porph.

<sup>2</sup> fidens est φψλ: fidenter.

<sup>3</sup> et quid A<sup>2</sup>ER.

<sup>4</sup> metuit aM : metuet E, II.

<sup>5</sup> Line 91 does not occur in any good MS. unless inserted by a late hand. Meineke deleted bibuli . . . oderunt and retained potores.

<sup>a</sup> Proverbial for calumny, though the origin of the expression is unknown.

<sup>67</sup> To continue my advice, if you need advice in aught—think often of what you say, and of whom, and to whom you say it. Avoid a questioner, for he is also a tattler. Open ears will not keep secrets loyally, and the word once let slip flies beyond recall. Let no maid or boy within your worshipful friend's marble threshold inflame your heart, lest the owner of the pretty boy or dear girl make you happy with a present so trifling or torment you if disobliging. What sort of a person you introduce, consider again and again, lest by and by the other's failings strike you with shame. At times we err and present someone unworthy: therefore, if taken in, forbear to defend him whose own fault drags him down, in order that, if charges assail one you know thoroughly, you may watch over and protect the man who relies on your championship. For when he is nibbled at with Theon's tooth <sup>a</sup> of slander, don't you feel that a little later the peril will pass to yourself? 'Tis your own safety that's at stake, when your neighbour's wall is in flames, and fires neglected are wont to gather strength.

<sup>86</sup> Those who have never tried think it pleasant to court a friend in power; one who has tried dreads it. While your barque is on the deep, see to it lest the breeze shift and bear you back. The grave dislike the gay, the merry the grave, the quick the staid, the lazy the stirring man of action: drinkers [who quaff Falernian in midnight hours] <sup>b</sup> hate the man who declines the proffered cups, however much you swear that you dread fevers at night. Take the

<sup>b</sup> The words bracketed in the Latin were probably introduced as a gloss from Epist. i. 14. 34.

HORACE

deme supercilio nubem : plerumque modestus
occupat obscuri speciem, taciturnus acerbi. 95

Inter cuncta leges et percontabere doctos,
qua ratione queas traducere leniter aevum,
num te semper inops agitet vexetque cupido,
num<sup>1</sup> pavor et rerum mediocriter utilium spes, virtutem doctrina paret Naturane donet, 100
quid minuat curas, quid te tibi reddat amicum,
quid pure tranquillet, honos an dulce lucellum,
an secretum iter et fallentis semita vitae.

Me quotiens reficit gelidus Digentia rivus,
quem Mandela bibit, rugosus frigore pagus, 105
quid sentire putas ? quid credis, amice, precari ?
sit mihi quod nunc est, etiam minus, et<sup>2</sup> mihi vivam quod superest aevi, si quid superesse volunt di ;
sit bona<sup>3</sup> librorum et provisae frugis in annum
copia, neu fluitem dubiae spe pendulus horae.<sup>4</sup> 110

Sed satis est orare Iovem, qui<sup>5</sup> ponit<sup>6</sup> et aufert, det vitam, det opes ; aequum mi animum ipse
parabo."

<sup>1</sup> num . . . num all good mss., V: ne or non.

<sup>2</sup> et V, II: ut aEM Porph.

<sup>3</sup> spes bona E.

<sup>4</sup> aurae.

<sup>5</sup> quae a, II.

<sup>6</sup> ponit V, II: donat, I.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. philosophers.

<sup>b</sup> These are things which may be contrasted with virtue, the summum bonum, e.g. our possessions, classed by the Stoics as ἀδιάφορα, indifferent things.

<sup>c</sup> Whether virtue can be taught (διδασκῆ, cf. doctrina) is discussed in Plato's Meno.

cloud from your brow ; shyness oft gets the look of secrecy, silence of sour temper.

<sup>96</sup> Amid all this you must read and question the wise,<sup>a</sup> how you may be able to pass your days in tranquillity. Is greed, ever penniless, to drive and harass you, or fears and hopes about things that profit little?<sup>b</sup> Does wisdom beget virtue,<sup>c</sup> or Nature bring her as a gift? What will lessen care? What will make you a friend to yourself? What gives you unruffled calm—honour, or the sweets of dear gain, or a secluded journey along the pathway of a life unnoticed<sup>d</sup>?

<sup>104</sup> For me, oft as Digentia<sup>e</sup> refreshes me, the icy brook of which Mandela drinks, that village wrinkled with cold, what deem you to be my feelings? What, think you, my friend, are my prayers? May I have my present store, or even less; may I live to myself for what remains of life, if the gods will that aught remain. May I have a goodly supply of books and of food to last the year; nor may I waver to and fro with the hopes of each uncertain hour.

<sup>111</sup> But 'tis enough to pray Jove, who gives and takes away, that he grant me life, and grant me means: a mind well balanced I will myself provide.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Epist. i. 17. 10.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Epist. i. 16. 5, with its note b. Mandela, now Cantalupo Bardella, is a lofty village, whose people came down to the Digentia for their water.

<sup>f</sup> i.e. the gods may give me life, and the means of existence, but, as Henley says, "I am the captain of my soul."

XIX

TO MAECENAS

Writing shortly before the publication of this book, in 20 B.C., Horace replies to the adverse criticism which had been levelled against his Epodes and Odes (Books i.-iii.). These, it was claimed, lacked originality and were mere imitations of Greek exemplars. Horace therefore contrasts the rude and servile imitation, to which he has himself been subjected, with his own generous use of noble models, according to rules followed by the great Greek poets themselves (1-34).

But the real reason why Horace has been assailed lies in the fact that the poet has not tried to please the general public or his offended critics. He refuses to resort to the usual methods of winning approval, and is therefore supposed to be arrogant. This is a charge which he declines to face (35-49).

XIX.

Prisco si credis, Maecenas docte, Cratino, nulla placere diu nec vivere carmina possunt,
 quae scribuntur aquae potoribus.<sup>1</sup> ut male sanos
 adscripsit Liber Satyris Faunisque poetas, vina fere dulces oluerunt mane Camenae.
 laudibus arguitur vini vinosus Homerus ;
 Ennius ipse pater numquam nisi potus ad arma
 prosiluit dicenda. “ Forum Putealque Libonis mandabo siccis, adimam cantare severis ” :
 hoc simul edixi,<sup>2</sup> non cessavere poetae
 nocturno certare mero, putere diurno.
 quid ? si quis voltu torvo ferus et pede nudo
 exiguaeque togae simulet textore<sup>3</sup> Catonem, virtutemne repraesentet moresque Catonis ?
 rupit Iarbitam Timagenis aemula lingua,<sup>4</sup>
 dum studet urbanus tenditque disertus haberi.

<sup>1</sup> potioribus ERπ.

<sup>2</sup> edixi E, Porph. : edixit a.

<sup>3</sup> ex ore φψ : extore R.

<sup>4</sup> cena aE.

---

<sup>a</sup> On Cratinus see Index. In his Πυρίλη he jested upon his own intemperance.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Iliad, vi. 261 ἀνδρὶ δὲ κεκμηῶτι μένος μέγα οἶνος ἀέξει, and the use of epithets applied to wine, such as εὐήνωρ, ἡδύποτος, μελιηδής, μελιφρων.

<sup>c</sup> Ennius says of himself, “numquam poetor nisi si podager.”

EPISTLE XIX

If you follow old Cratinus,<sup>a</sup> my learned Maecenas, no poems can please long, nor live, which are written by water-drinkers. From the moment Liber enlisted brain-sick poets among his Satyrs and Fauns, the sweet Muses, as a rule, have had a scent of wine about them in the morning. Homer, by his praises of wine, is convicted as a winebibber.<sup>b</sup> Even Father Ennius never sprang forth to tell of arms save after much drinking.<sup>c</sup> "To the sober I shall assign the Forum and Libo's Wall<sup>d</sup>; the stern I shall debar from song." Ever since I put forth this edict,<sup>e</sup> poets have never ceased to vie in wine-drinking by night, to reek of it by day. What, if a man were to ape Cato with grim and savage look, with bare feet and the cut of a scanty gown, would he thus set before us Cato's virtue and morals? In coping with Timagenes, his tongue brought ruin to Iarbitas<sup>f</sup>; so keen was his aim and effort to be deemed a man of

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 6. 35. The expression forum putealque Libonis denotes a life of business.

<sup>b</sup> For the terms used cf. Sat. ii. 2. 51.

<sup>c</sup> The precise meaning of rupit is uncertain. Porphyrio takes it literally, as if the attempt to rival the eloquence of Timagenes (a rhetorician of the day) made Iarbitas "burst asunder." More probably the word has the general sense of "ruined."

HORACE

decipit exemplar vitiis imitabile : quod si pallerem<sup>1</sup> casu, biberent exsangue cuminum.
 o imitatores, servum pecus, ut mihi saepe
 bilem, saepe iocum vestri movere tumultus ! 20

Libera per vacuum posui vestigia princeps, non aliena meo pressi pede. qui sibi fidet,<sup>2</sup> dux reget<sup>3</sup> examen. Parios<sup>4</sup> ego primus iambos ostendi Latio, numeros animosque secutus Archilochi, non res et agentia verba Lycamben. 25
 ac ne me foliis ideo brevioribus ornes,
 quod timui mutare modos et carminis artem,
 temperat Archilochi Musam pede mascula Sappho, temperat Alcaeus, sed rebus et ordine dispar, nec socerum quaerit, quem versibus oblinat<sup>5</sup> atris, 30
 nec sponsae laqueum famoso carmine nectit.
 hunc ego, non alio dictum prius ore, Latinus<sup>6</sup>
 volgavi fidicen. iuvat immemorata ferentem ingenuis<sup>7</sup> oculisque legi manibusque teneri.

Scire velis, mea cur ingratus opuscula lector 35
 laudet ametque domi, premat extra limen iniquus :
 non ego ventosae plebis suffragia venor
 impensis cenarum et tritae munere vestis ;
 non ego, nobilium scriptorum auditor<sup>8</sup> et ultor,

<sup>1</sup> pallerent Rπ.

<sup>2</sup> fidit φψλ.

<sup>3</sup> regit.

<sup>4</sup> patrios, II.

<sup>5</sup> obtinet II.

<sup>6</sup> Latinis λ.

<sup>7</sup> ingeniis.

<sup>8</sup> adiutor.

<sup>a</sup> A pale complexion was supposed to result from drinking cummin.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. in the Epodes.

<sup>c</sup> Sappho was worthy to rank with men. M. B. Ogle argues (against Bentley) in favour of construing Musam with Archilochi, and of interpreting temperat as "moderates" (A.J.P. xliii. (1922) pp. 55 ff.).

<sup>d</sup> A reference to Neobule and her father Lycambes, who were assailed by Archilochus ; cf. Epod. vi. 13.

wit and eloquence. A pattern with faults easy to copy leads astray. So if by chance I lost my colour, these poets would drink the bloodless cummin.<sup>a</sup> O you mimics, you slavish herd! How often your pother has stirred my spleen, how often my mirth!

<sup>21</sup> I was the first to plant free footsteps on a virgin soil; I walked not where others trod. Who trusts himself will lead and rule the swarm. I was the first to show to Latium the iambs<sup>b</sup> of Paros, following the rhythms and spirit of Archilochus, not the themes or the words that hounded Lycambes. And lest you should crown me with a scantier wreath because I feared to change the measures and form of verse, see how manlike<sup>c</sup> Sappho moulds her Muse by the rhythm of Archilochus; how Alcaeus moulds his, though in his themes and arrangement he differs, looking for no father-in-law to besmear with deadly verses, and weaving no halter for his bride<sup>d</sup> with defaming rhyme. Him, never before named by other lips, I, the lyrist of Latium, have made known.<sup>e</sup> It is my joy that I bring things untold before, and am read by the eyes and held in the hands of the gently born.

<sup>35</sup> Would you know why the ungrateful reader praises and loves my pieces at home, unjustly decries them abroad? I am not one to hunt for the votes of a fickle public at the cost of suppers and gifts of worn-out clothes.<sup>f</sup> I am not one who, listening to

<sup>a</sup> The poet referred to in hunc (l. 32) is Alcaeus, not Archilochus, and Horace is now boasting, not of his Epodes, but of his Odes.

<sup>f</sup> The poet here contrasts himself with the politician seeking votes. He does not invite people to come together to hear his poems, and then by unworthy means seek to win their approval.

HORACE

grammaticas ambire tribus et pulpita dignor. 40
 hinc illae lacrimae. "spissis indigna theatris
 scripta pudet recitare et nugis addere pondus," si dixi, "rides," ait, "et Iovis auribus ista servas : fidis enim manare poetica mella te solum, tibi pulcher." ad haec ego naribus uti 45
 formido et, luctantis acuto ne secer ungui,
 "displicet iste<sup>1</sup> locus," clamo et diludia posco.
 ludus enim genuit trepidum certamen et iram,
 ira truces inimicitias et funebre bellum.

<sup>1</sup> ille, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> I take nobiles as used in irony, not in seriousness, for the opening words of Juvenal "Semper ego auditor tantum? numquamne reponam . . .?" show what l. 39 means as a whole. Ultor is also ironical; after listening to those who called themselves nobiles scriptores the poet takes his revenge by reciting. Others take nobiles scriptores to mean Pollio, Virgil, Varius, etc., so that Horace says, "I hear such good poets that I neglect and so offend the professors of literature." In this case, ultor is added by way of jest.

<sup>b</sup> The grammatici, who lecture upon the poets from their pulpita or platforms, are the professional teachers of literature. Tribus is said in contempt.

"noble writers" and taking my revenge,<sup>a</sup> deign to court the tribes of lecturing professors.<sup>b</sup> "Hence those tears."<sup>c</sup> If I say, "I am ashamed to recite my worthless writings in your crowded halls, and give undue weight to trifles," "You are in merry mood," says one, "and keep your lines for the ears of Jove."<sup>d</sup> Fair in your own eyes you are, and believe that you, and you alone, distil the honey of poesy." At this I am afraid to turn up a scornful nose, and lest, if he wrestle with me, I be torn by his sharp nails, "The place<sup>e</sup> you choose suits me not," I cry, and call for a truce in the sports. For such sport begets tumultuous strife and wrath, and wrath begets fierce quarrels, and war to the death.

<sup>a</sup> This expression, first used literally by Terence in his Andria (l. 125), where Pamphilus shed tears of sympathy at the funeral of Chrysis, became proverbial in Latin literature, and was used, as here, even when there were no actual tears; cf. Cic. Pro Cael. 25. 61.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. Augustus. Cf. Sat. ii. 6. 52.

<sup>c</sup> The battle of wits has become a gladiatorial contest. In this, a combatant, if he thought his opponent had an unfair advantage in position, might call for a pause in the struggle (diludia), and an adjustment of conditions.

XX

TO HIS BOOK

THIS is an Epilogue to the collection of Epistles, now ready for publication.

The poet addresses his Book, as if it were a young and handsome slave, who is eager to escape from his master's house and to see something of the great world. There are untold perils in the path. After a brief vogue, the book will be neglected or sent to the provinces, and finally its doom will be sealed when it becomes a school-book for lads to learn their letters from !

Yet, when the book finds an audience, the poet would have it impart some information about his own life and characteristics.

XX.

Vertumnum Ianumque, liber, spectare videris, scilicet ut<sup>1</sup> prostes Sosiorum pumice mundus.<sup>2</sup> odisti clavis et grata sigilla pudico ;
 paucis ostendi gemis et communia laudas,
 non ita nutritus. fuge quo descendere gestis. 5
 non erit emisso reditus tibi. " quid miser egi ?
 quid volui ? " dices, ubi quis<sup>3</sup> te laeserit ; et scis in breve te cogi, cum plenus languet amator.

Quod si non odio peccantis desipit augur,
 carus eris Romae, donec te deserat<sup>4</sup> aetas ; 10
 contrectatus ubi manibus sordescere volgi coeperis, aut tineas pasces taciturnus inertis aut fugies Uticam aut vinctus mitteris Ilerdam.
 ridebit monitor non exauditus, ut ille qui male parentem in rupes protulit<sup>5</sup> asellum 15 iratus : quis enim invitum servare labore ?
 hoc quoque te manet, ut pueros elementa docentem
 occupet extremis in vicis balba<sup>6</sup> senectus.

<sup>1</sup> ut omitted by E.

<sup>2</sup> nudus θψλ.

<sup>3</sup> quid MSS.

<sup>4</sup> deseret.

<sup>5</sup> protrudit E.

<sup>6</sup> bella E.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the booksellers' quarters in Rome. There is a double entendre in prostes, pumice mundus and in other expressions in ll. 1-8.

<sup>b</sup> The pumice was used to smooth the ends of the roll. For the Socii, well-known as booksellers, see Ars Poet. 345.

<sup>c</sup> Referring to the scrinia or cases, in which books were kept under lock or seal.

<sup>d</sup> As applied to the book, in breve cogi means " rolled up

EPISTLE XX

You seem, my book, to be looking wistfully toward Vertumnus and Janus,<sup>a</sup> in order, forsooth, that you may go on sale, neatly polished with the pumice<sup>b</sup> of the Sosii. You hate the keys and seals,<sup>c</sup> so dear to the modest; you grieve at being shown to few, and praise a life in public, though I did not rear you thus. Off with you, down to where you itch to go. When you are once let out, there will be no coming back. "What, alas! have I done? What did I want?" you will say, when someone hurts you, and you find yourself packed into a corner,<sup>d</sup> whenever your sated lover grows languid.

<sup>e</sup> But unless hatred of your error makes the prophet lose his cunning, you will be loved in Rome till your youth leave you; when you've been well thumbed by vulgar hands and begin to grow soiled, you will either in silence be food for vandal moths, or will run away to Utica, or be sent in bonds to Ilerda.<sup>e</sup> Your monitor, from whom you turned away your ear, will then have his laugh, like the man who in anger pushed his stubborn ass over the cliff: for who would care to save an ass against his will? This fate, too, awaits you, that stammering age will come upon you as you teach boys their A B C in the city's outskirts.

small." With reference to the slave, it means "brought to poverty."

<sup>e</sup> i.e. sent to the provinces.

HORACE

Cum tibi sol tepidus pluris admoverit auris,<sup>1</sup> me libertino natum patre et in tenui re 20
maiores pinnas nido extendisse loqueris,
ut quantum generi demas virtutibus addas ;
me primis urbis belli placuisse domique,
corporis exigui, praecanum, solibus aptum,
irasci celerem, tamen ut placabilis essem. 25
forte meum si quis te percontabitur aevum,
me quater undenos sciat implevisse Decembris,
collegam Lepidum quo duxit<sup>2</sup> Lollius anno.

<sup>1</sup> annos.

<sup>2</sup> duxit mss. Porph. : dixit urged by Keller, accepted by Wilkins, Rolfe.

19 When the milder sun brings you a larger audience, you will tell them about me : that I was a freedman's son, and amid slender means spread wings too wide for my nest, thus adding to my merits what you take from my birth ; that I found favour, both in war and peace, with the foremost in the State ; of small stature, grey before my time, fond of the sun, quick in temper, yet so as to be easily appeased. If one chance to inquire my age, let him know that I completed my forty-fourth December in the year when Lollius drew Lepidus for colleague.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Lollius was consul in 21 B.C. The other consulship, first intended for Augustus himself, was later filled by the appointment of Lepidus.

BOOK II

I

TO AUGUSTUS

IN his Life of Horace, Suetonius tells us that the poet composed this Epistle for Augustus after the emperor, on reading certain of his Sermones, had complained because none of them were addressed to him: "Augustus scripta quidem eius usque adeo probavit . . . ut . . . post sermones vero quosdam lectos nullam sui mentionem habitam ita sit questus: 'irasci me tibi scito, quod non in plerisque eiusmodi scriptis mecum potissimum loquaris. An vereris ne apud posteros infame tibi sit, quod videaris familiaris nobis esse?' Expressitque eclogam ad se cuius initium est cum tot sustineas,"<sup>a</sup> etc. It is quite improbable that the sermones here referred to are either the Satires, which were published sixteen years earlier, or the First Book of Epistles, published some <sup>a</sup> "Augustus appreciated his writings so highly that, after reading some of his Sermones and finding no mention therein of himself, he sent him this complaint: 'Know that I am angry with you, because in your several writings of this type you do not address me—me above all. Is it your fear that posterity may deem it to your discredit, that you seem to be intimate with me?' And so he wrung from the poet the selection addressed to him, beginning cum tot sustineas."

EPISTLES, II. 1.

six years before. They must be the Epistles addressed to Florus (ii. 1), and to the Pisones (Ars Poetica), the present Epistle, therefore, being the latest of the three in composition.

Burdened as you are, O Caesar, with cares of State, you must not be approached by me in a long discourse (1-4).

Unlike the demigods of story, whose benefits to mankind were recognized only after death, your great services to the world are acknowledged in your lifetime (5-17), but this principle is not elsewhere applied by the Romans to contemporary merit, for they admire only what is ancient, and defend their attitude on the ground that the best works of the Greeks were their earliest (18-33). But how can a line be drawn strictly between ancient and modern (34-49) ?

Take a list of the older poets, and note how secure they are in the reputation assigned them by the critics. Ennius, for example, their "second Homer," cares little whether the promises of his Pythagorean dreams are fulfilled. Naevius is as familiar to us as if he were a recent writer. So with Pacuvius and Accius in tragedy ; Afranius, Plautus, Caecilius, and Terence in comedy (50-62).

This admiration should be more discriminating, for these early writers are far from perfect and often call for our indulgence rather than our approval. It is really envy of contemporary merit that accounts for this undue praise of the old writers and a depreciation of the new (63-89).

How different was the attitude of the Greeks toward novelty ! Once rid of war, they turned like children from one amusement to another—athletics, sculpture, painting, music, and tragedy, but in Rome we have been more serious, devoting ourselves to practical affairs, and only now, in these late days, turning to the writing of verses, as I am doing myself (90-117).

HORACE

This craze is not without its advantages. Poets are free from many vices. They promote the education of the young and serve the cause of religion (118-138). Let us look at the history of dramatic poetry. Beginning with rude Fescennine verses, whose scurrility had to be checked by law, it came under the refining influence of Greek art, which led to the almost complete elimination of the earlier rusticity (139-160). For tragedy the Romans have a natural aptitude, but they lack the finishing touch. Comedy is supposed to involve less labour, but for that very reason failure can not be so easily excused. Plautus, for instance, is careless and slipshod, being more anxious to fill his purse than to write good plays (161-176). The dramatic writer depends for success upon his audience, and therefore I renounce the stage. The masses call for bears and boxers, and even the educated care more for what delights the restless eye than for good drama. If Democritus were alive to-day, he would laugh, not at the scene on the stage, but at the audience, who applaud the actor before he utters a word, simply because of his fine clothes (177-207)! Yet don't suppose that I undervalue an art which I cannot handle, for to me a great dramatic poet, who can move my soul with his airy creations, is a wondrous magician (208-213).

But I pray you, O Caesar, to bestow a share of your patronage on those who write, not for spectators, but for readers (214-218).

EPISTLES, II. 1.

We poets, I know, often behave foolishly. We are tactless, over-sensitive to criticism, and expect too much consideration. But, after all, great merits call for great poets to celebrate them. Alexander was a good judge of painting and sculpture, but in poetry his taste was Boeotian, for he paid the wretched Choerilus for his poor verses. You, on the contrary, have chosen Virgil and Varius to sing your exploits, and you know that no sculptor reproduces the features of heroes more faithfully than the poet does their souls (219-250). If I could do so, I should much prefer to sing your exploits, but you are worthy of a greater poet, and I will not run the risk of bringing discredit upon you as well as upon myself. I should no more like to have a poor waxen portrait of myself offered for sale than to be sung in uncouth verses which sooner or later must come to an ignoble end, and provide wrapping material in a grocer's shop (250-270) !

LIBER SECUNDUS

I.

Cum tot sustineas et tanta negotia solus,
res Italas armis tuteris, moribus ornes,
legibus emendes, in publica commoda peccem,
si longo sermone morer tua tempora, Caesar.

Romulus et Liber pater et cum Castore Pollux, 5 post ingentia facta<sup>1</sup> deorum in templa recepti, dum terras hominumque colunt genus, aspera bella
componunt, agros assignant, oppida condunt, ploravere suis non respondere favorem speratum meritis. diram qui contudit hydram 10
notaque<sup>2</sup> fatali portenta labore subegit,
comperit invidiam supremo fine domari.
urit enim fulgore suo, qui praegravat artis
infra se positas; extinctus amabitur idem.
praesenti tibi maturos largimur honores, 15
iurandasque tuum per numen<sup>3</sup> ponimus aras,
nil oriturum alias, nil ortum tale fatentes.

Sed tuus hic<sup>4</sup> populus sapiens et iustus in uno, te nostris ducibus, te Graiis anteferendo,

<sup>1</sup> fata Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> numen VE: nomen aM.

<sup>3</sup> totaque E.

<sup>4</sup> hoc Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> Augustus initiated many social reforms, in an effort to improve the morals of the people, cf. Odes iii. 24. 35; iv. 5. 22; iv. 15. 9.

<sup>b</sup> Hercules.

BOOK II

EPISTLE I

Seeing that you alone carry the weight of so many great charges, guarding our Italian state with arms, gracing her with morals,<sup>a</sup> and reforming her with laws, I should sin against the public weal if with long talk, O Caesar, I were to delay your busy hours.

<sup>5</sup> Romulus, father Liber, Pollux and Castor, who, after mighty deeds, were welcomed into the temples of the gods, so long as they had care for earth and human kind, settling fierce wars, assigning lands, and founding towns, lamented that the goodwill hoped for matched not their deserts. He<sup>b</sup> who crushed the fell Hydra and laid low with fated toil the monsters of story found that Envy is quelled only by death that comes at last. For a man scorches with his brilliance who outweighs merits lowlier than his own, yet he, too, will win affection when his light is quenched. Upon you, however, while still among us, we bestow honours betimes, set up altars<sup>c</sup> to swear by in your name, and confess that nought like you will hereafter arise or has arisen ere now.

<sup>18</sup> Yet this people of yours, so wise and just in one respect, in ranking you above our own,

<sup>a</sup> According to Suetonius (Claud. ii.), an altar was first set up to Augustus at Lugdunum (Lyons) in 12 B.C., yet this Epistle must be a year or two earlier than that date.

HORACE

cetera nequaquam simili ratione modoque
 aestimat et, nisi quae terris semota suisque temporibus defuncta videt, fastidit et odit ;
 sic fautor veterum, ut tabulas peccare vetantis,
 quas bis quinque viri sanxerunt, foedera regum
 vel Gabiis vel cum rigidis aequata Sabinis, pontificum libros, annosa volumina vatum
 dictitet<sup>1</sup> Albano Musas in monte locutas.

Si, quia Graiorum<sup>2</sup> sunt antiquissima quaeque
 scripta vel optima, Romani pensantur eadem scriptores trutina, non est quod multa loquamur :
 nil intra est olea,<sup>3</sup> nil extra est in nuce duri ;
 venimus ad summum fortunae, pingimus atque
 psallimus et luctamur Achivis doctius<sup>4</sup> unctis.

Si meliora dies, ut vina, poemata reddit,
 scire velim, chartis pretium quotus arroget annus.
 scriptor abhinc annos centum qui decidit, inter perfectos veteresque<sup>5</sup> referri debet an inter
 vilis atque novos ? excludat iurgia finis.

“ est vetus atque probus, centum qui perficit annos.”
 quid, qui deperiit minor uno mense vel anno,
 inter quos referendus erit ? veteresne poetas,
 an quos et praesens et postera respuat<sup>6</sup> aetas ?

<sup>1</sup> dicat et  $\phi\psi\lambda$  : dicit et  $R\pi$ .

<sup>2</sup> Graiorum VE : Graecorum aM, II.

<sup>3</sup> olea Bentley after some inferior MSS. : oleam MSS.

<sup>4</sup> scitius.

<sup>5</sup> veteresne, II.

<sup>6</sup> respuat V : respuit M : respuet  $\phi\psi\lambda$ .

<sup>a</sup> The Twelve Tables, drawn up by the Decemvirs.

<sup>b</sup> A copy of a treaty made by Tarquinius Superbus with Gabii and written in archaic letters on bull's hide was still in existence in the time of Dionysius of Halicarnassus, i.e. the Augustan age (Dion. Hal. iv. 58).

<sup>c</sup> Books of ritual and religious law.

above Greek leaders, judges all other things by a wholly different rule and method, and scorns and detests all save what it sees has passed from earth and lived its days. So strong is its bias toward things ancient, that the Tables<sup>a</sup> forbidding transgression, which the ten men enacted, treaties in which our kings made equal terms with Gabii<sup>b</sup> or the sturdy Sabines, the Pontiffs' records,<sup>c</sup> the mouldy scrolls of seers<sup>d</sup>—these, it tells us over and over, were spoken by the Muses on the Alban mount.

<sup>28</sup> If, because among Greek writings the oldest are quite the best, we are to weigh Roman writers in the same balance, there is no need of many words. The olive has no hardness within, the nut has none without<sup>e</sup>; we have come to fortune's summit; we paint, we play and sing, we wrestle with more skill than the well-oiled Greeks.

<sup>34</sup> If poems are like wine which time improves, I should like to know what is the year that gives to writings fresh value. A writer who dropped off a hundred years ago, is he to be reckoned among the perfect and ancient, or among the worthless and modern? Let some limit banish disputes. "He is ancient," you say, "and good, who completes a hundred years." "What of one who passed away a month or a year short of that, in what class is he to be reckoned? The ancient poets, or those whom to-day and to-morrow must treat with scorn? "He

<sup>a</sup> Such as the Sibylline books.

<sup>e</sup> The Greeks and Romans may differ in the development of their genius just as much as olives and nuts, both of which are fruits, may differ in character from each other. Moreover, though we have conquered the world, it does not follow that we are superior to the Greeks in painting, in music, and in writing.

HORACE

“iste quidem veteres inter ponetur honeste, qui vel mense brevi vel toto est iunior anno.”
 utor permissio, caudaeque pilos ut equinae 45
 paulatim vello et demo unum, demo etiam<sup>1</sup> unum, dum cadat<sup>2</sup> elusus ratione ruentis acervi, qui redit in<sup>3</sup> fastos<sup>4</sup> et virtutem aestimat annis miraturque nihil nisi quod Libitina sacravit.

Ennius et sapiens et fortis et alter Homerus, 50
 ut critici dicunt, leviter curare videtur, quo promissa cadant et somnia Pythagorea.
 Naevius in manibus non est et mentibus haeret
 paene recens? adeo sanctum est vetus omne poema.
 ambigitur quotiens, uter utro sit prior, aufert 55
 Pacuvius docti famam senis, Accius alti,
 dicitur Afrani toga convenisse Menandro, Plautus ad exemplar Siculi properare Epicharmi, vincere Caecilius gravitate, Terentius arte.

<sup>1</sup> etiam, I: et item (or idem), II.

<sup>2</sup> cadet M.

<sup>3</sup> ad E, Porph.

<sup>4</sup> fastus aMR.

<sup>a</sup> Horace makes use of the logical puzzle known as sorites (σωρός, a heap). How many grains of sand make a heap or pile? The addition of no one grain will make that a heap which was not a heap before. He also seems to have asked how many hairs make a tail. See Plutarch's story of the two horses in his Sertorius.

<sup>b</sup> Horace is giving a summary of the conventional literary opinions of his day as to the old writers. Ennius is called sapiens because of his philosophical poems, and fortis, because in his Annales he recounted the fortia facta patrum. As to alter Homerus, this exaggerated phrase was used of him by Lucilius (ed. Marx, frag. 1189).

<sup>c</sup> Ennius tells us that Homer, appearing to him in a dream, informed him that his soul now dwelt in Ennius's surely will find a place of honour among the ancients, who is short by a brief month or even a whole year." I take what you allow, and like hairs in a horse's tail, first one and then another I pluck and pull away little by little, till, after the fashion of the falling heap,<sup>a</sup> he is baffled and thrown down, who looks back upon the annals, and values worth by years, and admires nothing but what the goddess of funerals has hallowed.
 400

<sup>50</sup> Ennius,<sup>b</sup> the wise and valiant, the second Homer (as the critics style him), seems to care but little what becomes of his promises and Pythagorean dreams.<sup>c</sup> Is not Naevius in our hands, and clinging to our minds, almost as of yesterday?<sup>d</sup> So holy a thing is every ancient poem. As often as the question is raised, which is the better of the two, Pacuvius gains fame as the learned old writer, Accius as the lofty one. The gown<sup>e</sup> of Afranius, 'tis said, was of Menander's fit; Plautus hurries along<sup>f</sup> like his model, Epicharmus of Sicily. Caecilius wins the prize for dignity, Terence for art. These authors body. This doctrine of transmigration of souls was taught by Pythagoras.

<sup>a</sup> Naevius died in 199 B.C. He wrote both tragedies and comedies, as well as an epic, the Bellum Punicum (this in Saturnian metre). Of the other writers named here, Pacuvius and Accius were tragic poets; the rest comic poets. For Livius see note a overleaf.

<sup>e</sup> Horace mentions the toga of Afranius, because that writer's plays were called togatæ, being comedies based on Roman characters and customs, in contrast with the palliatae, which were Greek throughout.

<sup>f</sup> The verb properare implies rapidity of movement, which we are to associate with Epicharmus, the great writer of Sicilian comedy. This was "essentially burlesque" (Jevons, Hist. of Greek Lit. p. 240).

HORACE

hos ediscit<sup>1</sup> et hos arto stipata theatro 60
spectat Roma potens ; habet hos numeratque poetas
ad nostrum tempus Livi scriptoris ab aevo.

Interdum volgus rectum videt, est ubi peccat.
si veteres ita miratur laudatque poetas,
ut nihil anteferat, nihil illis comparet, errat. 65
si quaedam nimis antique, si pleraque dure
dicere credit eos, ignave multa fatetur, et sapit et mecum facit et Iove iudicat aequo.
non equidem insector delendave<sup>2</sup> carmina Livi<sup>3</sup>
esse reor, memini quae plagosum mihi parvo 70 Orbiliū dictare ; sed emendata videri
pulchraque et exactis minimum distantia miror.
inter quae verbum emicuit si forte decorum, et<sup>4</sup> si versus paulo concinnior unus et alter, iniuste totum ducit venditque poema. 75

Indignor quicquam reprehendi, non quia crasse
compositum illepideve putetur, sed quia nuper, nec veniam antiquis, sed honorem et<sup>5</sup> praemia posci.
recte necne<sup>6</sup> crocum floresque perambulet<sup>7</sup> Attae
fabula si dubitem, clament periisse pudorem 80
cuncti paene patres, ea cum reprehendere coner, quae gravis Aesopus, quae doctus Roscius egit ;
vel quia nil rectum, nisi quod placuit sibi, ducunt,<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> ediscet Rπ.

<sup>2</sup> -que, II.

<sup>3</sup> Livii M : levi aE (hence Bentley read Laevi).

<sup>4</sup> et M, I : omitted in aE. <sup>5</sup> ac E Goth. <sup>6</sup> necne] nec.

<sup>7</sup> perambulat aMRπ.

<sup>8</sup> dicunt Eπ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Livius Andronicus, earliest of Latin writers, brought out two plays, a tragedy and a comedy, in 240 B.C. He died in 204 B.C.

<sup>b</sup> For recte perambulat cf. recto stet fabula talo (l. 176 below). The name Atta is said by Festus to have been a nickname meaning "one with a light, tripping step."

<sup>c</sup> The stage was perfumed with saffron-water. In flor

EPISTLES, II. 1. 60-83

mighty Rome learns by heart; these she views, when packed in her narrow theatre; these she counts as her muster-roll of poets from the days of Livius <sup>a</sup> the writer to our own.

<sup>63</sup> At times the public see straight; sometimes they make mistakes. If they admire the ancient poets and cry them up so as to put nothing above them, nothing on their level, they are wrong. If they hold that sometimes their diction is too quaint, and oftentimes too harsh, if they admit that much of it is flat, then they have taste, they take my side, and give a verdict with Jove's assent. Mark you! I am not crying down the poems of Livius—I would not doom to destruction verses which I remember Orbilius of the rod dictated to me as a boy: but that they should be held faultless, and beautiful, and well-nigh perfect, amazes me. Among them, it may be a pleasing phrase shines forth, or one or two lines are somewhat better turned—then these unfairly carry off and sell the whole poem.

<sup>76</sup> I am impatient that any work is censured, not because it is thought to be coarse or inelegant in style, but because it is modern, and that what is claimed for the ancients should be, not indulgence, but honour and rewards. If I were to question whether a play of Atta's keeps its legs <sup>b</sup> or not amidst the saffron and flowers,<sup>c</sup> nearly all our elders would cry out that modesty is dead, when I attempt to blame what stately Aesopus and learned Roscius once acted; either because they think nothing can be right save what has pleased themselves, or Porphyrio finds a reference to a play of Atta's called Matertera, in which a great number of flowers were enumerated. Atta, a writer of togatae, died in 78 B.C. He was, therefore, not very ancient, though his fragments show many archaisms.

HORACE

vel quia turpe putant parere minoribus, et quae imberbes<sup>1</sup> didicere senes perdenda fateri. 85

iam Saliare Numae carmen qui laudat et illud,
quod mecum ignorat, solus volt scire videri,
ingeniis non ille favet plauditque sepultis,
nostra sed impugnat, nos nostraque lividus odit.

Quod si tam Graecis novitas invisae fuisset 90
quam nobis, quid nunc esset vetus? aut quid haberet,<sup>2</sup> quod legeret tereretque viritim<sup>3</sup> publicus usus?

Ut primum positis nugari Graecia bellis
coepit et in vitium fortuna labier aequa, nunc athletarum studiis, nunc arsit equorum, 95
marmoris aut eboris fabros aut aeris amavit,
suspendit picta voltum mentemque tabella,
nunc tibicinibus, nunc<sup>4</sup> est gavisae tragoedis;
sub nutrice puella velut si luderet infans,
quod cupide petiit, mature plena reliquit. 100 quid placet aut odio est, quod non mutabile credas?<sup>5</sup> hoc paces habuere bonae ventique secundi.

Romae dulce diu fuit et sollemne reclusa
mane domo vigilare, clienti promere iura, cautos nominibus rectis expendere nummos, 105
maiores audire, minori dicere, per quae
crescere res posset, minui damnosa libido.

<sup>1</sup> imberbes MSS.: imberbi Cruquius.

<sup>2</sup> haberes, II.

<sup>3</sup> Quiritum Ursinus.

<sup>4</sup> tunc, II.

<sup>5</sup> Line 101 gives a fair sense here. Lachmann, however, transposed it so as to follow 107 and most editors accept his verdict. Vollmer puts it after 102.

---

<sup>a</sup> The hymns of the Salii, a priesthood of Mars instituted by Numa, were almost unintelligible to the priests themselves in the days of Quintilian; "Saliorum carmina vix sacerdotibus suis satis intellecta" (Quint. i. 6. 40).

<sup>b</sup> Probably a reference to the Persian wars, which were 404

because they hold it a shame to yield to their juniors, and to confess in their old age that what they learned in beardless youth should be destroyed. Indeed, whoever cries up Numa's Salian hymn,<sup>a</sup> and would alone seem to understand what he knows as little of as I do, that man does not favour and applaud the genius of the dead, but assails ours to-day, spitefully hating us and everything of ours.

<sup>90</sup> But if novelty had been as offensive to the Greeks as it is to us, what in these days would be ancient? What would the public have to read and thumb, each according to his taste?

<sup>93</sup> From the day she dropped her wars,<sup>b</sup> Greece took to trifling, and amid fairer fortunes drifted into folly: she was all aglow with passion, now for athletes, now for horses; she raved over workers in marble or ivory or bronze; with eyes and soul she hung enraptured on the painted panel; her joy was now in flautists, and now in actors of tragedy. Like a baby-girl playing at its nurse's feet, what she wanted in impatience, she soon, when satisfied, cast off. What likes and dislikes are there that you would not think easily changed? Such was the effect of happy times of peace and prosperous gales.

<sup>103</sup> At Rome it was long a pleasure and habit to be up at dawn with open doors, to set forth the law for clients, to pay out to sound debtors money under bonds, to give ear to one's elders and to tell one's juniors how an estate might be increased and ruinous followed by a wonderful literary and artistic epoch in Athens. In what follows Horace speaks of the various arts and pursuits of peace from the old Roman point of view. When the Roman was not at war, he was at work (cf. ll. 103 ff.).

HORACE

mutavit mentem populus levis et calet uno scribendi studio ; pueri<sup>1</sup> patresque severi
 fronde comas vincti cenant et carmina dictant. 110
 ipse ego, qui nullos me adfirmo scribere versus, invenior Parthis mendacior, et prius orto
 sole vigil calamum et chartas et scrinia posco.
 navem agere ignarus navis timet ; habrotonum aegro non audet nisi qui didicit dare ; quod medicorum<sup>2</sup> est promittunt medici<sup>2</sup> ; tractant fabrilis fabri : 116 scribimus indocti doctique poemata passim.

Hic error tamen et levis haec insania quantas
 virtutes habeat, sic collige. vatis avarus
 non temere est animus ; versus amat, hoc studet unum ;
 detrimenta, fugas servorum, incendia ridet ; 121
 non fraudem socio puerove incogitat<sup>3</sup> ullam pupillo ; vivit siliquis et pane secundo ;
 militiae quamquam piger et malus, utilis urbi,
 si das hoc, parvis quoque rebus magna iuvari. 125
 os tenerum pueri balbumque poeta figurat, torquet ab obscenis iam nunc sermonibus aurem,
 mox etiam pectus praeceptis format amicis,
 asperitatis et invidiae corrector et irae,
 recte facta refert, orientia tempora notis 130
 instruit exemplis, inopem solatur et aegrum.
 castis cum pueris ignara puella mariti
 disceret unde preces, vatem ni Musa dedisset ?
 poscit opem chorus et praesentia numina sentit, caelestis implorat aquas docta prece blandus,<sup>4</sup> 135
 avertit morbos, metuenda pericula pellit,

<sup>1</sup> puerique inferior mss., Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> melicorum, melici Bentley : modicorum, modici J. S. Phillimore.      <sup>3</sup> puero vel cogitat E.      <sup>4</sup> blandos a.

<sup>a</sup> Even while dining, they have an amanuensis ready and they wear the ivy sacred to poets instead of the usual garland of flowers.

indulgence curbed. The fickle public has changed its taste and is fired throughout with a scribbling craze ; sons and grave sires sup crowned with leaves and dictate their lines.<sup>a</sup> I myself, who declare that I write no verses, prove to be more of a liar than the Parthians : before sunrise I wake, and call for pen, paper, and writing-case. A man who knows nothing of a ship fears to handle one ; no one dares to give southernwood to the sick unless he has learnt its use ; doctors undertake a doctor's work ; carpenters handle carpenters' tools : but, skilled or unskilled, we scribble poetry, all alike.

<sup>118</sup> And yet this craze, this mild madness, has its merits. How great these are, now consider. Seldom is the poet's heart set on gain : verses he loves ; this is his one passion. Money losses, runaway slaves, fires—he laughs at all. To cheat partner or youthful ward he never plans. His food is pulse and coarse bread. Though a poor soldier, and slow in the field, he serves the State, if you grant that even by small things are great ends helped. The poet fashions the tender, lisping lips of childhood ; even then he turns the ear from unseemly words ; presently, too, he moulds the heart by kindly precepts, correcting roughness and envy and anger. He tells of noble deeds, equips the rising age with famous examples, and to the helpless and sick at heart brings comfort. Whence, in company with chaste boys, would the unwedded maid learn the suppliant hymn, had the Muse not given them a bard ? Their chorus asks for aid and feels the presence of the gods, calls for showers from heaven, winning favour with the prayer he has taught, averts disease, drives away dreaded dangers, gains peace impetrat et pacem et locupletem frugibus annum.

HORACE

carmine di superi placantur, carmine Manes.

Agricolae prisci, fortes parvoque beati, condita post frumenta levantes tempore festo 140
corpus et ipsum animum spe finis dura ferentem, cum sociis operum et pueris<sup>1</sup> et coniuge fida, Tellurem porco, Silvanum lacte piabant,
floribus et vino Genium memorem brevis aevi.
Fescennina per hunc inventa<sup>2</sup> licentia morem 145
versibus alternis opprobria rustica fudit, libertasque recurrentis accepta per annos
lusit amabiliter, donec iam saevus apertam
in rabiem coepit verti iocus et per honestas ire domos impune minax. doluere cruento 150
dente lacessiti ; fuit intactis quoque cura condicione super communi ; quin etiam lex poenaeque lata,<sup>3</sup> malo quae nollet carmine quemquam describi : vertere modum, formidine fustis
ad bene dicendum delectandumque redacti. 155 Graecia capta ferum victorem cepit et artis
intulit agresti Latio. sic horridus ille

<sup>1</sup> et pueris E : pueris (et omitted) AR.

<sup>2</sup> invecta Poliziano, Bentley. <sup>3</sup> nata, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> In ll. 131-132, Horace is thinking chiefly of the chorus of boys and girls who sang the Carmen Saeculare in 17 B.C.; in ll. 134-137, he sets forth the function of the chorus, especially in association with religious ceremonies.

<sup>b</sup> This account of the development of a Latin drama from a rustic origin may be compared with Virgil's sketch of the rise of the drama in Georg. ii. 385 ff., and with the outline given by Livy in Book vii. 2.

<sup>c</sup> Each man's guardian spirit ; cf. Epist. i. 7. 94.

<sup>d</sup> These Fescennine verses, the earliest form of Italian drama, survived in later times in the abusive songs sung at weddings and in triumphal processions. They were so 408

EPISTLES, II. I. 137-157

and a season rich in fruits. Song wins grace with the gods above, song wins it with the gods below.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>139</sup> The farmers <sup>b</sup> of old, a sturdy folk with simple wealth, when, after harvesting the grain, they sought relief at holiday time for the body, as well as for the soul, which bore its toils in hope of the end, together with slaves and faithful wife, partners of their labours, used to propitiate Earth with swine, Silvanus with milk, and with flowers and wine the Genius <sup>c</sup> who is ever mindful of the shortness of life. Through this custom came into use the Fescennine licence, which in alternate verse poured forth rustic taunts <sup>d</sup>; and the freedom, welcomed each returning year, was innocently gay, till jest, now growing cruel, turned to open frenzy, and stalked amid the homes of honest folk, fearless in its threatening. Stung to the quick were they who were bitten by a tooth that drew blood; even those untouched felt concern for the common cause, and at last a law <sup>e</sup> was carried with a penalty, forbidding the portrayal of any in abusive strain. Men changed their tune, and terror of the cudgel led them back to goodly and gracious forms of speech.

<sup>156</sup> Greece, the captive, made her savage victor captive, and brought the arts into rustic Latium.

named either from the town of Fescennium in Etruria, or from the fact that a symbol of life (fascinum) was often carried in procession in order to ward off the evil eye. Such a phallic symbol was in common use among the Greeks, and it is a well-known fact that the germ of Greek comedy is to be found in the phallic songs sung in the Dionysiac festivities.

<sup>a</sup> In the Twelve Tables, viz., as given by Cicero, De rep. iv. 10. 12, "si quis occentavisset sive carmen condidisset quod infamiam faceret flagitiumve alteri." Cf. Sat. ii. 1. 82.

HORACE

defluxit numerus<sup>1</sup> Saturnius, et grave virus
munditiae pepulere<sup>2</sup>; sed in longum tamen aevum manserunt hodieque manent vestigia ruris. 160
serus enim Graecis admovit acumina chartis et post Punica bella quietus quaerere coepit, quid Sophocles et Thespis et Aeschylus utile ferrent.
temptavit quoque rem, si digne vertere posset,
et placuit sibi, natura sublimis et acer: 165
nam spirat tragicum satis et feliciter audet, sed turpem putat inscite<sup>3</sup> metuitque lituram.

Creditur, ex medio quia res accersit,<sup>4</sup> habere
sudoris minimum, sed habet Comoedia tanto 169
plus oneris, quanto veniae minus. adspice, Plautus quo pacto partis tutetur amantis ephebi,
ut patris attenti, lenonis ut insidiosus,
quantus sit Dossennus edacibus in parasitis,
quam non adstricto percurrat pulpita socco.
gestit enim nummum in loculos demittere,<sup>5</sup> post hoc securus cadat an recto stet fabula talo. 176

Quem tulit ad scaenam ventoso Gloria curru,

<sup>1</sup> numeris Rφψ.

<sup>2</sup> peperere φψλλ.

<sup>3</sup> inscit(a)e a, II: inscriptis VE: inscitiae V<sup>2</sup>a<sup>2</sup>M.

<sup>4</sup> accersit a, II, Porph.: accessit VE.

<sup>5</sup> demittere aM.

---

<sup>a</sup> This ancient Italian metre, now generally believed to be based on accent instead of quantity, was used by Naevius in his epic on the Punic War, and is illustrated by numerous inscriptions. With the introduction of Greek literature into Rome, it gave way to the hexameter and other Greek metrical forms.

<sup>b</sup> The word vertere means not merely to "translate," but rather to "transfer," i.e. from the Greek to the Roman stage.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. as Pope says of Dryden, he lacks "the last and greatest art, the art to blot."

<sup>d</sup> Dossennus, the sly villain, was one of the stock characters

410

Thus the stream of that rude Saturnian measure <sup>a</sup> ran dry and good taste banished the offensive poison; yet for many a year lived on, and still live on, traces of our rustic past. For not till late did the Roman turn his wit to Greek writings, and in the peaceful days after the Punic wars he began to ask what service Sophocles could render, and Thespis and Aeschylus. He also made essay, whether he could reproduce <sup>b</sup> in worthy style, and took pride in his success, being gifted with spirit and vigour; for he has some tragic inspiration, and is happy in his ventures, but in ignorance, deeming it disgraceful, hesitates to blot.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>168</sup> 'Tis thought that Comedy, drawing its themes from daily life, calls for less labour; but in truth it carries a heavier burden, as the indulgence allowed is less. See how poorly Plautus maintains the part of the youthful lover, how poorly that of the close father, or of the tricky pander; what a Dossennus <sup>d</sup> he is among his greedy parasites; with what a loose sock <sup>e</sup> he scours the scene. Yes, he is eager to drop a coin into his pocket and, that done, he cares not whether his play fall or stand square on its feet.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>177</sup> The man whom Glory carries to the stage in in the Atellan farce of the Oscans. The nomen of Plautus, viz. Maccius, is plausibly derived from another of these stock characters, i.e. Maccus, the buffoon.

* The soccus, or low slipper worn by the actors, represents Comedy, as the cothurnus, or high buskin, stands for Tragedy.

<sup>f</sup> Horace, wedded to classical standards, could not appreciate Plautus fairly. Thus he here imputes to him a sordid motive for characteristics which were probably due to the influence of native forms of drama. See the translator's edition of the Andria of Terence (Introduction, p. xxviii).

HORACE

exanimat lentus spectator, sedulus inflat :
 sic leve, sic parvum est, animum quod laudis avarum
 subruit aut reficit. valeat res ludicra, si me 180
 palma negata macrum, donata reducit opimum.

Saepe etiam audacem fugat hoc terretque poetam,
 quod numero plures, virtute et honore minores,
 indocti stolidique et depugnare parati,
 si discordet eques, media inter carmina poscunt 185
 aut ursum aut pugiles : his nam plebecula gaudet.<sup>1</sup>
 verum equitis quoque iam migravit ab aure voluptas
 omnis ad incertos oculos et gaudia vana.
 quattuor aut pluris aulaea premuntur in horas,
 dum fugiunt equitum turmae peditumque catervae ;
 mox trahitur manibus regum fortuna retortis, 191
 esseda festinant, pilenta, petorrita, naves, captivum portatur ebur, captiva Corinthus.
 si foret in terris, rideret Democritus, seu diversum confusa genus panthera camelo 195
 sive elephans albus volgi converteret<sup>2</sup> ora ;
 spectaret populum ludis attentius ipsis
 ut sibi praebentem nimio<sup>3</sup> spectacula plura :
 scriptores autem narrare putaret asello
 fabellam surdo. nam quae pervincere voces 200
 evaluere sonum, referunt quem nostra theatra ?
 Garganum mugire putes nemus aut mare Tuscum ;

<sup>1</sup> plaudet, II.

<sup>2</sup> converterit Priscian, Bentley.

<sup>3</sup> nimio V, I ; mimo, II Porph. ; so Bentley, Orelli, Vollmer.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. always looking for something fresh. For the knights cf. Sat. i. 10. 76. They occupied the first fourteen rows in the theatre, in accordance with the law of Roscius.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the performance continues. In the ancient theatre the curtain was lowered into the floor at the beginning and raised from it at the end of a play.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. the laughing philosopher. See Epist. i. 12. 12.

<sup>d</sup> The camelopard or giraffe.

her windy car, the listless spectator leaves spiritless, the eager one exultant ; so light, so small is what casts down or upbuilds a soul that craves for praise. Farewell the comic stage, if denial of the palm sends me home lean, its bestowal plump !

<sup>182</sup> Often even the bold poet is frightened and put to rout, when those who are stronger in number, but weaker in worth and rank, unlearned and stupid and ready to fight it out if the knights dispute with them, call in the middle of a play for a bear or for boxers : 'tis in such things the rabble delights. But nowadays all the pleasure even of the knights has passed from the ear to the vain delights of the wandering <sup>a</sup> eye. For four hours or more the curtains are kept down,<sup>b</sup> while troops of horse and files of foot sweep by : anon are dragged in kings, once fortune's favourites, their hands bound behind them : with hurry and scurry come chariots, carriages, wains, and ships ; and borne in triumph are spoils of ivory, spoils of Corinthian bronze. Were Democritus <sup>c</sup> still on earth, he would laugh ; whether it were some hybrid monster—a panther crossed with a camel <sup>d</sup>—or a white elephant, that drew the eyes of the crowd—he would gaze more intently on the people than on the play itself, as giving him more by far worth looking at. But for the authors—he would suppose that they were telling their tale to a deaf ass.<sup>e</sup> For what voices have ever prevailed to drown the din with which our theatres resound ? One might think it was the roaring of the Garganian forest or of the

* By introducing asello, Horace varies the old proverbial saying for wasted labour, surdo fabellam narrare (cf. Terence, Heaut. 222). There was a Greek saying, ὄνως τις ἔλεγε μῦθον : ὁ δὲ τὰ ὦτα ἐκίνει, "a man told a story to an ass ; the ass only shook his ears."

HORACE

tanto cum strepitu ludi spectantur et artes divitiaeque peregrinae, quibus oblitus actor cum stetit in scaena, concurrit dextera laevae.<sup>1</sup> 205
"dixit adhuc aliquid?" "nil sane." "quid placet
ergo?"

"lana Tarentino violas imitata<sup>2</sup> veneno."
ac ne forte putes me, quae facere ipse recusem,
cum recte tractent alii, laudare maligne, ille per extensum<sup>3</sup> funem mihi posse videtur 210
ire poeta, meum qui pectus inaniter angit,
irritat, mulcet, falsis terroribus implet,
ut magus, et modo me Thebis, modo ponit Athenis.

Verum age et his, qui se lectori credere malunt
quam spectatoris fastidia ferre superbi, 215
curam redde brevem, si munus Apolline dignum vis complere libris et vatibus addere calcar, ut studio maiore petant Helicon virentem.

Multa quidem nobis facimus mala saepe poetae (ut vineta egomet caedam mea), cum tibi librum 220
sollicito damus aut fesso; cum laedimur, unum
si quis amicorum est ausus reprehendere versum;
cum loca iam recitata revolvimus irrevocati;
cum lamentamur non apparere labores
nostros et tenui deducta poemata filo; 225 cum speramus eo rem venturam<sup>4</sup> ut, simul atque carmina rescieris nos fingere, commodus ultro arcessas<sup>5</sup> et egere vetes et scribere cogas.

<sup>1</sup> laeva, II.

<sup>2</sup> imitare, II.

<sup>3</sup> extensum M.

<sup>4</sup> eo rem] forem Rπ: item fore venturum φψλλ.

<sup>5</sup> accersas E.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the actor's dress.

<sup>b</sup> The library founded by Augustus in Apollo's temple on the Palatine; cf. Epist. i. 3. 17.

Tuscan Sea: amid such clamour is the entertainment viewed, the works of art, and the foreign finery, and when, overlaid with this, the actor steps upon the stage, the right hand clashes with the left. "Has he yet said anything?" Not a word. "Then what takes them so?" 'Tis the woollen robe <sup>a</sup> that vies with the violet in its Tarentine dye. And lest, perchance, you may think that I begrudge praise when others are handling well what I decline to try myself, methinks that poet is able to walk a tight rope, who with airy nothings wrings my heart, inflames, soothes, fills it with vain alarms like a magician, and sets me down now at Thebes, now at Athens.

<sup>214</sup> But come, upon those, too, who prefer to put themselves in a reader's hands, rather than brook the disdain of a scornful spectator, bestow a moment's attention, if you wish to fill with volumes that gift so worthy of Apollo,<sup>b</sup> and to spur on our bards to seek with greater zeal Helicon's verdant lawns.

<sup>219</sup> We poets doubtless often do much mischief to our own cause—let me hack at my own vines <sup>c</sup>—when you are anxious or weary and we offer you our book; when we are hurt if a friend has dared to censure a single verse; when, unasked, we turn back to passages already read; when we complain that men lose sight of our labours, and of our poems so finely spun; when we hope it will come to this, that, as soon as you hear we are composing verses, you will go so far as kindly to send for us, banish our poverty, and compel us to write. None the less,

<sup>c</sup> Proverbial of doing something to one's own injury. Horace humorously includes himself among the poetasters who are so annoying.

HORACE

sed tamen est operae pretium cognoscere, qualis
 aedituos habeat belli spectata domique 230
 Virtus, indigno non committenda poetae.
 gratus Alexandro regi magno fuit ille Choerilus, incultis qui versibus et male natis rettulit acceptos, regale nomisma, Philippos ;
 sed veluti tractata notam labemque remittunt 235
 atramenta, fere scriptores carmine foedo splendida facta linunt. idem rex ille, poema qui tam ridiculum tam care prodigus emit, edicto vetuit, ne quis se praeter Apellen
 pingeret, aut alius Lysippo duceret aera 240
 fortis Alexandri voltum simulantia. quod si
 iudicium subtile videndis artibus illud
 ad libros et ad haec Musarum dona vocares,
 Boeotum in crasso iurares aere natum.

At neque dedecorant tua de se iudicia atque 245 munera, quae multa dantis cum laude tulerunt dilecti tibi<sup>1</sup> Vergilius Variusque<sup>2</sup> poetae, nec magis expressi voltus per aenea signa,
 quam per vatis opus mores animique virorum
 clarorum apparent. nec sermones ego mallem 250
 repentis per humum quam res componere gestas, terrarumque situs et flumina dicere, et arces
 montibus impositas et barbara regna, tuisque auspiciis totum confecta duella per orbem, claustraque custodem pacis cohibentia Ianum, 255

<sup>1</sup> tui E.

<sup>2</sup> Varusque V.

<sup>a</sup> Virtus, the sum total of a great man's merits, is here personified, and poets are spoken of as the priests in her temple.

<sup>b</sup> The Philippi were gold coins which bore the image of Philip of Macedon, and circulated freely throughout the Greek world. Choerilus was an epic poet of Iasos in Caria, mentioned again in Ars Poetica, 357.

'tis worth inquiring what manner of ministrants attend on Merit,<sup>a</sup> tried at home and in the field, and never to be entrusted to an unworthy poet. Well-pleasing to the great king Alexander was that poor Choerilus, who could thank his uncouth and misbegotten verses for the philips<sup>b</sup>—good royal coin—that he received; but as ink when handled leaves mark and stain, so oftentimes with unseemly verse poets put a blot on bright exploits. That same king who lavishly paid so dearly for a poem so foolish, by an edict forbade anyone save Apelles to paint him, or any other than Lysippus to model bronze in copying the features of brave Alexander. But call that judgement, so nice for viewing works of art, to books and to these gifts of the Muses, and you'd swear that he'd been born in Boeotia's heavy air.<sup>c</sup>

But Virgil and Varius, those poets whom you love, discredit not your judgement of them nor the gifts which, to the giver's great renown, they have received; and features are seen with no more truth, when moulded in statues of bronze, than are the manners and minds of famous heroes, when set forth in the poet's work. And for myself, I should not prefer my "chats," that crawl along the ground,<sup>d</sup> to the story of great exploits, the tale of distant lands and rivers, of forts on mountain tops, of barbaric realms, of the ending of wars under your auspices throughout the world, of bars that close on Janus, <sup>c</sup> As the heavy air of the moist lowlands of Boeotia was contrasted with the clear atmosphere of Attica, so the Boeotians were proverbially dull, the Athenians sharp-witted; cf. Cicero, De fato, iv. 7.

<sup>d</sup> Under sermones Horace includes both his Satires and Epistles, which are inspired by a Musa pedestris (Sat. ii. 6. 17).

HORACE

et formidatam Parthis te principe Romam, si quantum cuperem possem quoque; sed neque parvum

carmen maiestas recipit tua, nec meus audet
rem temptare pudor quam vires ferre recusent.
sedulitas autem stulte quem diligit urget, 260
praecipue cum se numeris commendat et arte;
discit<sup>1</sup> enim citius meminitque libentius illud
quod quis deridet, quam quod probat et veneratur.
nil moror officium quod me gravat, ac neque ficto
in peius voltu proponi cereus usquam 265
nec prave factis decorari versibus opto, ne rubeam pingui donatus munere, et una cum scriptore meo, capsula porrectus<sup>2</sup> operta,<sup>3</sup> deferar in vicum vendentem tus et odores et piper et quidquid chartis amicitur ineptis.<sup>4</sup> 270

<sup>1</sup> discet V.

<sup>3</sup> aperta.

<sup>2</sup> porreptus E.

<sup>4</sup> inemptis.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the closing of the temple of Janus in peace cf. Odes, iv. 15. 9, and with ll. 252, 253 cf. "arces Alpibus impositas tremendis," in Odes iv. 14. 11.

<sup>b</sup> That Augustus was sensitive about being made the subject of poor eulogies is stated by Suetonius (Augustus, 89).

<sup>c</sup> i.e. to have one's portrait in wax offered for sale.

<sup>d</sup> Horace means that sooner or later the work of a poor

guardian of peace,<sup>a</sup> and of that Rome who under your sway has become a terror to Parthians—if only I had power equal to my longing ; but neither does your majesty admit of a lowly strain,<sup>b</sup> nor does my modesty dare to essay a task beyond my strength to bear. Nay, officious zeal frets with its folly those it loves, above all when it commends itself by numbers and by art ; for men more quickly learn and more gladly recall what they deride than what they approve and esteem. Not for me attentions that are burdensome, and I want neither to be displayed anywhere in wax,<sup>c</sup> with my features misshaped, nor to be praised in verses ill-wrought, lest I have to blush at the stupid gift, and then, along with my poet, outstretched in a closed chest, be carried into the street where they sell frankincense and perfumes and pepper and everything else that is wrapped in sheets of useless paper.<sup>d</sup> poet is found to be worthless, and his books can be used only for waste paper. Thus, under the figure of a funeral the poet is borne to his last resting-place—the grocer's shop ! Cf. Euphues' Anatomy of Wit : "We constantly see the booke that at Christmas lieth bound on the stacioner's stall, at Easter be broken in the haberdasher's shop." In l. 269 there is an amusing pun on Vicus Tuscus, the name of a street leading out of the Forum, along which were all kinds of shops ; cf. Sat. ii. 3. 228.

II

TO FLORUS

If one were to offer a slave for sale, and declare his defects, the purchaser would have no right to complain of these later. So you, Florus, must not grumble at my not writing to you, for I warned you before you started that I never answer letters. And then, over and above this, you complain of my breaking my word, when you receive from me no poems (1-25).

Let me remind you of the story of a certain soldier of Lucullus. One night he had all his savings stolen. Upon this he rushed off furiously to storm a castle, and won thereby both glory and a rich reward. But later, when his general invited him to repeat the exploit, he declined, and advised the officer to send somebody who had lost his purse. I am like that soldier. I lost everything at Philippi, and took to poetry to make a living, but now that I have a competence I should be mad if I did not prefer ease to writing (26-54).

But there are other reasons why I do not write. Time is stealing from me my poetical power, as it has already taken from me my youth. After all, too, tastes vary, and while you are asking for Odes, others call for Epodes or Satires. Besides, how can you expect a man to write amid all the distractions of Rome? The poet must live in seclusion, and then he becomes quite unfit for active life. If this is true of Athens, how much more so is it of noisy Rome? How then can I deign to write poetry here? (55-86).

HORACE

"Deign," did I say? Why, the only way to win success here as a poet is to join some mutual admiration club, and for my part I am no longer suing for favour—I am no longer writing, and I can decline to listen to the recitations of others (87-105).

Poor poets, however much derided, are well satisfied with themselves. But the writing of good poetry is a very serious matter, and demands a fine taste and careful discrimination in the choice of language. The result will seem easy, but that ease is the product of much labour. Perhaps it is better to be one of those self-complacent writers than to be ever finding fault with oneself. The man at Argos learned what a misfortune it is to be robbed of one's illusions (106-140).

The truth is, it is time for a man of my years to throw aside mere toys like poetry and take up the serious business of life, that of philosophy. So, beginning with the elements, I repeat to myself the wise precepts that I have picked up. Avarice, for example, is as much a disease as dropsy. For the latter you consult a doctor, and when the course prescribed brings no relief, you change the treatment or the doctor. Should not avarice be dealt with in like manner? (141-154).

If wealth could make you wise, you ought to devote yourself wholly to it. And yet what comes from all this struggle to make money? Ownership brings no more satisfaction than the right to use and enjoy,

EPISTLES, II. II.

and even the law recognizes the fact that this usucapio is the same in the end as dominium or ownership. As a matter of fact, there is no such thing as out and out ownership, or ownership in perpetuity, for Death prevents that (155-179).

In any case, wealth takes many forms, and some care nothing for what others value so highly. Why this is so, I cannot say, but for my part I hold that life's pleasures are to be enjoyed in moderation. Let me but be free from squalor, and I shall be just as happy sailing on life's sea in a small as in a large ship (180-204).

But avarice is not the only evil that may assail the heart, and the wise man will free himself from all disturbing passions and fears. If one cannot live well, he should give way to those who can. When a man has had his share in the banquet of life, it is time to withdraw (205-216).

The Florus of this Epistle is the Julius Florus to whom Epist. i. 3 is also addressed. He is still in the suite of Tiberius, and as there is a great similarity of tone between this Epistle and the first of the First Book, it is likely that it was written shortly after the publication of that book in 20 B.C. At any rate, in view of the writer's renunciation of lyric poetry in this Epistle, it can hardly have been written in the years when the Carmen Saeculare and the Fourth Book of Odes came into being (17-13 B.C.).

II.

Flore, bono claroque fidelis amice Neroni,
 si quis forte velit puerum tibi vendere natum Tibure vel Gabiis, et tecum sic agat : " hic et candidus et talos a vertice pulcher ad imos fiet eritque tuus nummorum milibus octo, 5
 verna ministeriis ad nutus aptus erilis, litterulis Graecis imbutus, idoneus arti cuilibet ; argilla quidvis<sup>1</sup> imitaberis<sup>2</sup> uda ;
 quin etiam canet indoctum sed dulce bibenti.
 multa fidem promissa levant, ubi plenius aequo 10
 laudat venalis qui volt extrudere<sup>3</sup> merces.
 res urget me nulla ; meo sum pauper in aere.
 nemo hoc mangonum faceret tibi ; non temere a me
 quivis ferret idem. semel hic cessavit et, ut fit,
 in scalis latuit metuens pendentis habenae : 15
 des nummos, excepta nihil te si fuga laedit<sup>4</sup> " :
 ille ferat pretium poenae securus, opinor.
 prudens emisti vitiosum ; dicta tibi est lex<sup>5</sup> :

<sup>1</sup> quavis E.    <sup>2</sup> imitabimur, II.    <sup>3</sup> excludere V, II.
<sup>4</sup> laedit V, Bentley : laedat Mss. Orelli.    <sup>5</sup> est tibi lex, I.

<sup>a</sup> Tiberius Claudius Nero, the future Emperor Tiberius :
cf. Epist. i. 3. 2.    <sup>b</sup> i.e. home-born, not foreign.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. the strap which was hanging up where all could see it.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. because he has not represented the slave as faultless, but has expressly mentioned (excepta) a defect. Cf. Sat. ii. 3. 286. Editors who (e.g. Orelli) read laedat (l. 16) make 424

EPISTLE II

My Florus, loyal friend of great and good Nero,<sup>a</sup> suppose someone by chance should wish to sell you a slave, born at Tibur or Gabii,<sup>b</sup> and should deal with you thus: "Here's a handsome boy, comely from top to toe; you may take him, to have and to hold, for eight thousand sesterces; home-bred he is, apt for service at his owner's beck, knows a bit of Greek learning, and can master any art; the clay is soft—you will mould it to what you will; moreover, he will sing for you over your cups in a sweet if artless fashion. Too many promises lessen confidence, when a seller who wants to shove off his wares praises them unduly. I am under no constraint; I have slender means, but am not in debt. None of the slave-dealers would give you such a bargain; not everyone would easily get the like from me. Once he played truant, and hid himself, as boys will do, under the stairs, fearing the hanging strap.<sup>c</sup> Give me the sum asked, if his running off, duly noted, does not trouble you": the seller, I take it, would get his price without fear of penalty.<sup>d</sup> You bought him with your eyes open—fault and all; the condition was told you; do you still pursue the speech of the seller close with line 15, so that both des (l. 16), and ferat (l. 17) provide the apodosis or conclusion to si quis forte velit (l. 2). We prefer to follow Bentley in including l. 16 in the seller's speech.

HORACE

insequeris tamen hunc et lite moraris iniqua ?
 dixi me pigrum proficiscenti tibi, dixi 20
 talibus officiis prope mancum, ne mea saevus iurgares ad te quod epistula nulla rediret.<sup>1</sup> quid tum profeci, mecum facientia iura
 si tamen attemptas ? quereris super hoc etiam, quod exspectata tibi non mittam carmina mendax. 25

Luculli miles collecta viatica multis
 aerumnis, lassus dum noctu sterit, ad assem perdiderat : post hoc vehemens lupus, et sibi et hosti iratus pariter, ieiunis dentibus acer, praesidium regale loco deiecit, ut aiunt, 30
 summe munito et multarum divite rerum.
 clarus ob id factum donis ornatur honestis,<sup>2</sup>
 accipit et bis dena super sestertia nummum.
 forte sub hoc tempus castellum evertere praetor
 nescio quod cupiens hortari coepit eundem 35
 verbis quae timido quoque possent addere mentem :
 “ i, bone, quo virtus tua te vocat, i pede fausto, grandia laturus meritorum praemia. quid stas ? ”
 post haec ille catus, quantumvis rusticus : “ ibit, ibit eo, quo vis, qui zonam perdidit,” inquit. 40

Romae nutriri mihi contigit atque doceri iratus Graeis quantum nocuisset Achilles.
 adiecere bonae paulo plus artis Athenae, scilicet ut vellem<sup>3</sup> curvo dinoscere rectum
 atque inter silvas Academi quaerere verum. 45
 dura sed emovere loco me tempora grato

<sup>1</sup> veniret φψλλ.

<sup>2</sup> opimis V.

<sup>3</sup> possim, II: possem.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lucullus commanded the Roman forces in the war with Mithridates, king of Pontus, from 74 B.C. to 67 B.C.

<sup>b</sup> He studied Homer's Iliad.

the seller and annoy him with an unjust suit? I told you when you were leaving that I was lazy; I told you that for such duties I was well-nigh crippled, lest you should angrily scold, because no letter of mine reached you in reply. What good did I then do, if when right is on my side you still attack it? And then, over and above this, you complain that the verses you looked for I fail to send, false to my word.

<sup>26</sup> A soldier of Lucullus,<sup>a</sup> by dint of many toils, had laid by savings, but one night, when weary and slumbering, had lost all down to the last penny. After this, furious as a wolf, angry with himself and his foe alike, and fiercely showing hungry teeth, he dislodged, they say, a royal garrison from a strongly fortified site, rich in vast treasure. Winning fame thereby, he was decorated with gifts of honour, and received, over and above, twenty thousand sesterces in coin. Soon after this it chanced that the commander, wishing to storm some fort, began to urge the man with words that might have given spirit even to a coward: "Go, sir, whither your valour calls you. Go, good luck to you!—to win big rewards for your merits. Why stand still?" On this the shrewd fellow, rustic though he was, replied: "Yes, he will go—go where you wish—he who has lost his wallet."

<sup>41</sup> At Rome I had the luck to be bred, and taught how much Achilles' wrath had harmed the Greeks.<sup>b</sup> Kindly Athens added somewhat more training, so that, you know, I was eager to distinguish the straight from the crooked, and to hunt for truth in the groves of Academe. But troublous times tore me from that pleasant spot, and the tide of civil civilisque rudem belli tulit aestus in arma Caesaris Augusti non responsura lacertis.

HORACE

 unde simul primum me dimisere Philippi,<sup>1</sup>
 decisis humilem pennis inopemque paterni 50
 et laris et fundi, paupertas impulit audax ut versus facerem : sed quod non desit<sup>2</sup> habentem quae poterunt umquam satis expurgare cicutae, ni melius dormire putem quam scribere versus ?
 Singula de nobis anni praedantur euntes ; 55
 eripuerunt iocos, Venerem, convivia, ludum ;
 tendunt extorquere poemata : quid faciam vis ?
 denique non omnes eadem mirantur amantque :
 carmine tu gaudes, hic delectatur iambis,
 ille Bioneis sermonibus et sale nigro. 60
 tres mihi convivae prope dissentire videntur,
 poscentes vario multum diversa palato.
 quid dem ? quid non dem ? renuis tu, quod<sup>3</sup> iubet alter ;
 quod petis, id sane est invisum acidumque duobus.
 Praeter cetera me Romaene poemata censes 65
 scribere posse inter tot curas totque labores ?
 hic sponsum vocat, hic auditum scripta, relictis
 omnibus officiis ; cubat hic in colle Quirini, hic extremo in Aventino, visendus uterque ;
 intervalla vides humane commoda. “ verum 70
 purae<sup>4</sup> sunt plateae, nihil ut meditantibus obstat.”

<sup>1</sup> philippis φϕλλ.

<sup>2</sup> deficit G.W. Mooney in Hermath. xv. p. 161; cf. Tib. iv. 1. 100.

<sup>3</sup> quod tu, II (not δ); so Vollmer.

<sup>4</sup> plures, II (plurae R).

<sup>a</sup> After the defeat of Brutus at Philippi Horace withdrew from the Republican cause, unlike Pompeius Varus and other friends, who kept up the struggle under Sextus Pompeius. Cf. Odes ii. 7. 15. The poet's estate at Venusia was doubtless confiscated.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 1. 7.

<sup>c</sup> Such as Horace's Epodes.

EPISTLES, II. II. 47-71

strife flung me, a novice in war, amid weapons that were to be no match for the strong arms of Caesar Augustus. Soon as Philippi gave me discharge<sup>a</sup> therefrom, brought low with wings clipped and beggared of paternal home and estate, barefaced poverty drove me to writing verses. But now that I have sufficient store, what doses of hemlock could ever suffice to cleanse my blood, if I were not to think it better to slumber<sup>b</sup> than to scribble verses?

<sup>55</sup> The years, as they pass, plunder us of all joys, one by one. They have stripped me of mirth, love, feasting, play; they are striving to wrest from me my poems. What would you have me do? After all, men have not all the same tastes and likes. Lyric song is your delight, our neighbour here takes pleasure in iambs,<sup>c</sup> the one yonder in Bion's satires, with their caustic wit.<sup>d</sup> 'Tis, I fancy, much like three guests who disagree; their tastes vary, and they call for widely different dishes. What am I to put before them? what not? You refuse what your neighbour orders: what you crave is, to be sure, sour and distasteful to the other two.

<sup>65</sup> Besides all else, do you think I can write verses at Rome amid all my cares and all my toils? One calls me to be surety, another, to leave all my duties and listen to his writings. One lies sick on the Quirinal hill, another on the Aventine's far side; I must visit both. The distances, you see, are comfortably convenient! "Yes, but the streets are clear, so that nothing need hinder you in conning

<sup>a</sup> Bion, an Athenian philosopher of the early third cent. B.C., was famous for his biting wit. His name represents Satire in general, including Horace's own Sermones or Satires, which contain but a minimum of the sal niger referred to.

HORACE

festinat calidus mulis gerulisque redemptor, torquet nunc lapidem, nunc ingens machina tignum,
 tristia robustis luctantur funera plaustis,
 hac rabiosa fugit canis, hac lutulenta ruit sus : 75
 i nunc et versus tecum meditare canoros.
 scriptorum chorus omnis amat nemus et fugit urbem,<sup>1</sup>
 rite cliens Bacchi somno gaudentis et umbra :
 tu me inter strepitus nocturnos atque diurnos vis canere et contracta<sup>2</sup> sequi vestigia vatū ? 80
 ingenium, sibi quod vacuas desumpsit Athenas et studiis annos septem dedit insenuitque libris et curis, statua taciturnius exit plerumque et risu populum quatit : hic ego rerum fluctibus in mediis et tempestatibus urbis 85
 verba lyrae motura sonum conectere digner ?

Frater erat Romae consulti rhetor, ut<sup>3</sup> alter
 alterius sermone meros audiret honores, Gracchus ut hic illi, foret huic ut Mucius ille.<sup>4</sup>
 qui minus argutos vexat furor iste poetas ? 90
 carmina compono, hic elegos. mirabile visu caelatumque novem Musis opus ! adspice primum, quanto cum fastu, quanto molimine circumspectemus vacuum Romanis vatibus aedem !

<sup>1</sup> urbes, II.

<sup>2</sup> contracta E, known to Porph. : contacta mss., Porph., adopted by Orelli and others : cantata V : non tacta Bentley.

<sup>3</sup> et, II (not δ). Bentley read pactus (for frater) and consulto.

<sup>4</sup> huic . . . ille Lambinus, Bentley, all editors : hic . . . illi mss.

<sup>a</sup> Hic, i.e. in Rome, where it is even more difficult to devote oneself to study than in Athens.

<sup>b</sup> Under such conditions self-respect would prevent him from writing. This is further illustrated in the next paragraph. See p. 422.

<sup>c</sup> Both the Gracchi, Tiberius and Gaius, were orators. There were three well-known jurists named Mucius Scaevola.
 430

verses." In hot haste rushes a contractor with mules and porters ; a huge crane is hoisting now a stone and now a beam ; mournful funerals jostle massive wagons ; this way runs a mad dog : that way rushes a mud-bespattered sow. Now go, and thoughtfully con melodious verses. The whole chorus of poets loves the grove and flees the town, duly loyal to Bacchus, who finds joy in sleep and shade. Would you wish me, amid noises by night and noises by day, to sing and pursue the minstrels' narrow path-way ? A gifted man, that has chosen for home sequestered Athens, that has given seven years to his studies and grown grey over his books and meditations, when he walks abroad is often more mute than a statue and makes the people shake with laughter : and here,<sup>a</sup> amid the waves of life, amid the tempests of the town, am I to deign<sup>b</sup> to weave together words which shall awake the music of the lyre ?

<sup>87</sup> Two brothers at Rome, a lawyer and a pleader, were on such terms that nothing but compliments would each hear from the other's lips : the one was Gracchus to the other, the other Mucius to him.<sup>c</sup> And our singer poets—how does this madness trouble them any the less ? I compose lyrics, my friend elegiacs : "'Tis wondrous to behold ! A work of art, engraven by the Muses nine !" Mark you first, with what pride, with what importance, our contemplative gaze wanders o'er the temple, now open to Roman bards.<sup>d</sup> And by and by, if haply

<sup>d</sup> The temple of Apollo on the Palatine, with which was associated a famous library in two sections, one for Greek, the other for Latin books. On the walls were medallions of famous authors. Cf. Epist. ii. 1. 216.

HORACE

mox etiam, si forte vacas,<sup>1</sup> sequere et procul audi, 95
 quid ferat et qua re sibi nectat uterque coronam.
 caedimur et totidem plagis consumimus hostem
 lento Samnites ad lumina prima duello.
 discedo Alcaeus puncto illius ; ille meo quis ?
 quis nisi Callimachus ? si plus adposcere visus, 100
 fit Mimnermus et optivo cognomine crescit.
 multa fero, ut placem genus irritabile vatum,
 cum scribo et supplex populi suffragia capto ;
 idem finitis studiis et mente recepta
 obturem patulas impune legentibus auris. 105

Ridentur mala qui componunt carmina ; verum
 gaudent scribentes et se venerantur et ultro,
 si taceas, laudant quidquid scripsere beati.
 at qui legitimum cupiet fecisse poema,
 cum tabulis animum censoris sumet honesti ; 110
 audebit, quaecumque parum splendoris habebunt et sine pondere erunt et honore indigna ferentur,<sup>2</sup> verba movere loco, quamvis invita recedant et versentur adhuc intra<sup>3</sup> penetralia Vestae ;

<sup>1</sup> vacat.

<sup>2</sup> feruntur, I, δ.

<sup>3</sup> inter MSS.

---

<sup>a</sup> The two poets, indulging in mutual compliments, and inflicting their compositions on each other, are humorously compared to a pair of those heavy-armed gladiators known as Samnites, who would engage in a wearisome, though harmless fight, till night put an end to the contest.

<sup>b</sup> It is commonly supposed that in this whole scene the second poet referred to by Horace is Propertius, the elegiac writer (cf. l. 91) who called himself "the Roman Callimachus." Callimachus, an Alexandrian poet of the third cent. B.C., was commonly held to be the greatest of Greek elegists. For Mimnermus cf. Epist. i. 6. 65. He lived in the latter half of the seventh cent. B.C., and was the first to make elegy a vehicle for love-sentiment.

you have time, follow, and draw close to hear what each has to offer, and with what he weaves for himself a chaplet. We belabour each other, and with tit for tat use up our foe, like Samnites, in a long-drawn bout, till the first lamps are lighted.<sup>a</sup> By his vote I come off an Alcaeus. What is he by mine? What, but a Callimachus! If he seems to claim more, he becomes a Mimnermus, and is glorified with the title of his choice.<sup>b</sup> Much do I endure, to soothe the fretful tribe of bards, so long as I am scribbling, and humbly suing for public favour; but now that my studies are ended and my wits recovered, I would, without fear of requital, stop up my open ears when they recite.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>106</sup> Those who write poor verses are a jest; yet they rejoice in the writing and revere themselves; and, should you say nothing, they themselves praise whatever they have produced—happy souls! But the man whose aim is to have wrought a poem true to Art's rules, when he takes his tablets, will take also the spirit of an honest censor.<sup>d</sup> He will have the courage, if words fall short in dignity, lack weight, or be deemed unworthy of rank, to remove them from their place, albeit they are loth to withdraw, and still linger within Vesta's precincts.<sup>e</sup> Terms long

<sup>a</sup> Horace means that if he does not write, he need not listen. Others prefer to connect impune with legentibus. The others recite without fear of his retaliating.

<sup>b</sup> These lines were used by Dr. Johnson as the motto for his Dictionary.

<sup>c</sup> The allusion is obscure. Vesta perhaps stands for the most sacred traditions of Rome, so that the words rejected by the poet still remain in common use. Keller thinks that Horace uses a quotation from Ennius or some other early poet.

HORACE

obscurata diu populo bonus eruet atque 115
 proferet in lucem speciosa vocabula rerum, quae priscis memorata Catonibus atque Cethegis nunc situs informis premit et deserta vetustas ;
 adsciscet nova, quae genitor produxerit usus.
 vemens et liquidus<sup>1</sup> puroque simillimus amni 120
 fundet opes Latiumque beabit divite lingua ;
 luxuriantia compescet, nimis aspera sano
 levabit cultu, virtute carentia<sup>2</sup> tollet, ludentis speciem dabit et torquebitur, ut qui nunc Satyrum, nunc agrestem Cyclopa movetur. 125
 Praetulerim scriptor delirus inersque videri,
 dum mea delectent mala me vel denique fallant, quam sapere et ringi. fuit haud ignobilis Argis,<sup>3</sup>
 qui se credebat miros audire tragoedos
 in vacuo laetus sessor plausorque theatro ; 130 cetera qui vitae servaret munia recto
 more, bonus sane vicinus, amabilis hospes, comis in uxorem, posset qui ignoscere servis
 et signo laeso non insanire lagoenae, posset qui rupem et puteum vitare patentem.<sup>4</sup> 135
 hic ubi cognatorum opibus curisque reffectus
 expulit elleboro morbum bilemque meraco,
 et redit ad sese : “ pol, me occidistis, amici,
 non servastis,” ait, “ cui sic extorta voluptas
 et demptus per vim mentis gratissimus error.” 140

<sup>1</sup> vehemens MSS. : et vehemens liquidus D.

<sup>2</sup> carentia DEM : calentia Va.

<sup>3</sup> Argus.

<sup>4</sup> parentem, II.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Ars Poetica, 50.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Ars Poetica, 71, 72.

<sup>c</sup> Those who dance most easily do so as the result of hard training ; cf. Pope :

As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.

<sup>d</sup> Ringi means literally “ to show one's teeth like a snarling

lost in darkness the good poet will unearth for the people's use and bring into the light—picturesque terms which, though once spoken by a Cato and a Cethegus of old,<sup>a</sup> now lie low through unseemly neglect and dreary age. New ones he will adopt which Use has fathered and brought forth.<sup>b</sup> Strong and clear, and truly like a crystal river, he will pour forth wealth and bless Latium with richness of speech; he will prune down rankness of growth, smooth with wholesome refinement what is rough, sweep away what lacks force—wear the look of being at play, and yet be on the rack, like a dancer who plays now a Satyr, and now a clownish Cyclops.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>126</sup> I should prefer to be thought a foolish and clumsy scribbler, if only my failings please, or at least escape me, rather than be wise and unhappy.<sup>d</sup> Once at Argos there was a man of some rank, who used to fancy that he was listening to wonderful tragic actors, while he sat happy and applauded in the empty theatre—a man who would correctly perform all other duties of life, a most worthy neighbour, an amiable host, kind to his wife, one that could excuse his slaves, and not get frantic if the seal of a flask were broken, one that could avoid a precipice or an open well. This man was cured by his kinsmen's help and care, but when with strong hellebore he had driven out the malady and its bile, and had come to himself again, he cried: "Egad! you have killed me, my friends, not saved me; for thus you have robbed me of a pleasure and taken away perforce the dearest illusion of my heart."

dog," and is used here of the unhappy, self-critical poet who is never content with what he produces, in contrast with the contented, self-complacent writer.

HORACE

Nimirum sapere est abiectis utile nugis,
et tempestivum pueris concedere ludum,
ac non verba sequi fidibus modulanda Latinis,
sed verae numerosque modosque ediscere vitae.
quocirca mecum loquor haec tacitusque recordor : 145

Si tibi nulla sitim finiret copia lymphae,
narrares medicis : quod, quanto plura parasti,
tanto plura cupis, nulline faterier audes ?
si vulnus tibi monstrata radice vel herba non fieret levius, fugeres radice vel herba 150
proficiente nihil curarier : audieras, cui
rem di donarent, illi decedere pravam stultitiam ; et cum sis nihilo sapientior ex quo
plenior es, tamen uteris monitoribus isdem ?

At si divitiae prudentem reddere possent, 155
si cupidum timidumque minus te, nempe ruberes, viveret in terris te si quis avarior uno.
si proprium est, quod quis libra mercatus<sup>1</sup> et aere est,<sup>1</sup> quaedam, si credis consultis, mancipat usus ;
qui te pascit ager tuus est, et vilicus Orbi, 160
cum segetes occat tibi mox frumenta daturas,<sup>2</sup>
te dominum sentit. das nummos, accipis uvam, pullos, ova, cadum temeti : nempe modo isto
paulatim mercaris agrum, fortasse trecentis aut etiam supra nummorum milibus emptum. 165
quid refert, vivas numerato nuper an olim ?

<sup>1</sup> mercatus, I, π : mercatur, II : est omitted, II.

<sup>2</sup> daturas V, II : daturus, I.

---

<sup>a</sup> A reference to the common mode of conveying ownership in property, viz. by a symbolic sale, in which a balance, held by a third party, was struck by the purchaser with a copper coin.

<sup>b</sup> Usucapio, legal possession, uninterrupted and continued for a certain time, resulted in ownership (dominium). But perhaps Horace jocularly refers to matrimony, where in 436

<sup>141</sup> In truth it is profitable to cast aside toys and to learn wisdom ; to leave to lads the sport that fits their age, and not to search out words that will fit the music of the Latin lyre, but to master the rhythms and measures of a genuine life. Therefore I talk thus to myself and silently recall these precepts :

If no amount of water could quench your thirst, you would tell your story to the doctor : seeing that the more you get, the more you want, do you not dare to make confession to any man ? If your wound were not relieved by the root or herb prescribed, you would give up being treated with the root or herb that did you no good : you had perhaps been told that perverse folly flees from him to whom the gods had given wealth ; but though you are no wiser since you became richer, do you still follow the same counsellors ?

<sup>155</sup> But surely if wealth could make you wise, if less wedded to desires and fears, you would blush if there lived upon earth a greater miser than you. If that is a man's own which he buys with bronze and balance,<sup>a</sup> there are some things, if you trust the lawyers, which use <sup>b</sup> conveys ; the farm which gives you food is yours, and the bailiff of Orbius, when he harrows the corn-land which is shortly to give you grain, feels you to be his master. You give your coin ; you receive grapes, poultry, eggs, a jar of wine : in that way, mark you ! you are buying bit by bit the farm once purchased for three hundred thousand sesterces, or even more. What does it matter, whether you live on what was paid out lately or certain cases manus might result from usus. So Polluck, C.R. xxxi. (1917).

HORACE

emptor Aricini quondam<sup>1</sup> Veientis et arvi
 emptum cenat holus, quamvis aliter putat ; emptis
 sub noctem gelidam lignis calefactat aënum ;
 sed vocat usque suum, qua<sup>2</sup> populus adsita certis 170
 limitibus vicina refugit<sup>3</sup> iurgia ; tamquam sit proprium quicquam, puncto quod mobilis horae nunc prece, nunc pretio, nunc vi, nunc morte suprema permutet dominos et cedat in altera iura.
 sic<sup>4</sup> quia perpetuus nulli datur usus, et heres 175 heredem alterius<sup>5</sup> velut unda supervenit undam, quid vici prosunt aut horrea ? quidve Calabris
 saltibus adiecti Lucani, si metit Orcus grandia cum parvis, non exorabilis auro ?
 Gemmas, marmor, ebur, Tyrrhena sigilla, tabellas, argentum, vestes Gaetulo murice tinctas 181
 sunt qui non habeant, est qui non curat habere.
 cur alter fratrum cessare et ludere et ungui
 praeferat Herodis palmetis pinguibus, alter dives et importunus ad umbram lucis ab ortu 185
 silvestrem flammis et ferro mitiget agrum, scit Genius, natale comes qui temperat astrum,
 naturae deus humanae, mortalis in unum
 quodque caput, voltu mutabilis, albus et ater.
 utar et ex modico, quantum res poscet, acervo 190
 tollam, nec metuam quid de me iudicet heres, quod non plura datis invenerit ; et tamen idem
 scire volam, quantum simplex hilarisque nepoti

<sup>1</sup> quondam π<sup>2</sup>: quoniam V, most MSS.

<sup>2</sup> quia ER: quod π.

<sup>3</sup> refigit.

<sup>4</sup> sic E<sup>2</sup>M<sup>2</sup>: si MSS., Porph.

<sup>5</sup> alternis Bentley.

---

<sup>a</sup> Ownership may be transferred by donation in response to an appeal (prece), and by confiscation (vi), as well as by purchase and inheritance.

some time ago? The man who once bought a farm at Aricia or Veii bought the greens for his dinner, though he thinks otherwise; he bought the logs with which he boils the kettle in the chill of nightfall. Yet he calls it all his own, up to where the poplars, planted beside fixed boundaries, prevent the wrangling of neighbours: just as though anything were one's own, which in a moment of flitting time, now by prayer,<sup>a</sup> now by purchase, now by force, now—at the last—by death, changes owners and passes under the power of another. Thus since to none is granted lasting use, and heir follows another's heir as wave follows wave, what avail estates or granaries—what avail Lucanian forests joined to Calabrian, if Death reaps great and small—Death who never can be won over with gold?

<sup>180</sup> Gems, marble, ivory, Tuscan vases, paintings, plate, robes dyed in Gaetulian purple—there are those who have not; there is one who cares not to have. Of two brothers one prefers, above Herod's rich palm-groves,<sup>b</sup> idling and playing and the anointing of himself; the other, wealthy and untiring, from dawn to shady eve subdues his woodland farm with flames and iron plough. Why so, the Genius alone knows—that companion who rules our star of birth, the god of human nature, though mortal for each single life, and changing in countenance, white or black.<sup>c</sup> I shall use and from my modest heap take what need requires, nor shall I fear what my heir will think of me, because he does not find more than I have given him. And yet, withal, I shall wish to know how much the frank and cheerful giver is distinct from the spendthrift, how much the frugal

<sup>b</sup> Herod the Great had famous groves of date-palms near Jericho.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Epist. ii. 1. 144.

HORACE

discrepet et quantum discordet parcus avaro. 194
 distat enim, spargas tua prodigus, an neque sumptum
 invitus facias neque plura parare labores,
 ac potius, puer ut festis Quinquatribus olim,
 exiguo gratoque fruaris tempore raptim.
 pauperies immunda domus<sup>1</sup> procul absit<sup>1</sup>: ego, utrum
 nave ferar magna an parva, ferar unus et idem. 200
 non agimur tumidis velis Aquilone secundo :
 non tamen adversis aetatem ducimus Austris, viribus, ingenio, specie, virtute, loco, re<sup>2</sup>
 extremi primorum, extremis usque priores. 204
 Non es avarus : abi. quid ? cetera iam simul isto cum vitio fugere<sup>3</sup> ? caret tibi pectus inani ambitione ? caret mortis formidine et ira ?
 somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, sagas,
 nocturnos lemures portentaque Thessala rides ?
 natalis grate numeras ? ignoscis amicis ? 210
 lenior et melior fis<sup>4</sup> accedente senecta ?
 quid te exempta iuvat<sup>5</sup> spinis de pluribus una ?
 vivere si recte nescis, decede peritis.
 lusisti satis, edisti satis atque bibisti :
 tempus abire tibi est, ne potum largius aequo 215
 rideat et pulset lasciva decentius<sup>6</sup> aetas.

<sup>1</sup> domus and absit omitted, II (only absit omitted in R).
 Hence procul procul absit Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> loco re, I, R: colore, II.

<sup>3</sup> fugere D, II: fuge rite aEM.

<sup>4</sup> sis E. <sup>5</sup> iuvit D: levat.

<sup>6</sup> licentius r<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>a</sup> The Quinquatrus, or festival of Minerva, was a school-vacation of five days, from March 19 to March 23.

<sup>b</sup> For Thessálian witchcraft cf. Epod. v. 45 ; Odes, i. 27. 21.

is at variance with the miserly. For it does differ whether you scatter your money lavishly, or whether, while neither reluctant to spend, nor eager to add to your store, you snatch enjoyment of the brief and pleasant hour, like a schoolboy in the spring holidays.<sup>a</sup> Far from me be squalid want at home : yet, be my vessel large or small, I, the passenger aboard, shall remain one and the same. Not with swelling sails are we borne before a favouring north wind, yet we drag not out our life struggling with southern gales ; in strength, in wit, in person, in virtue, in station, in fortune, behind the foremost, ever before the last.

<sup>205</sup> You are no miser. Good ! What then ? Have all the other vices taken to flight with that ? Is your heart free from vain ambition ? Is it free from alarm and anger at death ? Dreams, terrors of magic, marvels, witches, ghosts of night, Thessalian portents<sup>b</sup>—do you laugh at these ? Do you count your birthdays thankfully ? Do you forgive your friends ? Do you grow gentler and better, as old age draws near ? What good does it do you to pluck out a single one of many thorns ? If you know not how to live aright, make way for those who do. You have played enough, have eaten and drunk enough. 'Tis time to quit the feast,<sup>c</sup> lest, when you have drunk too freely, youth mock and jostle you, playing the wanton with better grace.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 1. 118, where, as here, Horace has in mind the famous passage in Lucretius, De rerum nat. iii. 938,

cur non ut plenus vitae conviva recedis ?

ARS POETICA

OR EPISTLE TO THE PISOS

THIS, the longest of Horace's poems, is found in nearly all mss. under the title Ars Poetica, which is also the name assigned to it by Quintilian and used by the commentator Porphyrio. Yet the composition is a letter rather than a formal treatise, and it is hard to believe that Horace himself is responsible for the conventional title. It has the discursive and occasionally personal tone of an Epistle, whereas it lacks the completeness, precision, and logical order of a well-constructed treatise. It must therefore be judged by the same standards as the other Epistles and Sermones, and must be regarded as an expression of more or less random reflections, suggested by special circumstances, upon an art which peculiarly concerned one or more of the persons addressed. These are a father and two sons of the Piso family, but nobody knows with certainty what particular Pisos—and there are many on record—they are.

Though the writer touches upon various kinds of poetry, yet as fully one-third of the whole poem is concerned with the drama, it is a plausible inference that one at least of the Pisos—presumably the elder son (l. 366)—was about to write a play, perhaps one with an Homeric background (ll. 128, 129), and possibly one conforming to the rules of the Greek satyric drama (ll. 220 ff.). Thus the special interests of the Pisos may have determined Horace's choice of topics.

THE ART OF POETRY

The following is a brief outline of the main subjects handled in the letter :

(a) A poem demands unity, to be secured by harmony and proportion, as well as a wise choice of subject and good diction. Metre and style must be appropriate to theme and to character. A good model will always be found in Homer (ll. 1-152).

(b) Dramatic poetry calls for special care—as to character drawing, propriety of representation, length of a play, number of actors, use of the chorus and its music, special features for the satyric type, verse-forms, and employment of Greek models (ll. 153-294).

(c) A poet's qualifications include common sense, knowledge of character, adherence to high ideals, combination of the dulce with the utile, intellectual superiority, appreciation of the noble history and lofty mission of poetry, and above all a willingness to listen to and profit by impartial criticism (ll. 295-476).

The following is a more detailed analysis :

In poetry as in painting there must be unity and simplicity (1-23). We poets must guard against extremes, and while avoiding one error must not fall into its opposite (24-31). A good sculptor pays careful attention to details, but at the same time makes sure that his work as a whole is successful (32-37).

A writer should confine himself to subjects within his power. He will then be at no loss for words and will follow a correct order, which will enable him to say the right thing at the right moment (38-45). As to diction, he must be careful in his choice of language. He can, by means of a skilful combination, give a fresh tone to familiar terms, and he may even coin words in moderation as the old poets used to do. Like all other mortal things, words change and pass out of existence, for they are subject to the caprice of fashion (46-72).

HORACE

The metres most fitting for the several types of verse were established by the great Greek poets, and we must follow them (73-85). So with the tone and style of the various kinds. In the drama, for example, the tragic and the comic are distinct, though occasionally they will overlap (86-98), for above all things a play must appeal to the feelings of an audience, and the language must be adapted to the characters impersonated. Where there is lack of such agreement, everybody will laugh in scorn (99-118).

Either follow tradition or invent a consistent story. Achilles, Medea, Orestes, and so on must be portrayed as they are known to us in Greek literature, while new characters must be handled with a consistency of their own (119-127). It is hard to deal with general notions, such as anger, greed, and cowardice, so as to individualize them for yourself and you, my friend Piso, are quite right to dramatize some Homeric theme, where the characters introduced have well-known traits, rather than attempt something distinctly original. And yet, even in such public property as the Homeric epics you may win private rights by handling your material in an original fashion. Make a simple beginning, like that of the Odyssey, where the sequel becomes clearer and increases in brilliancy. Homer indulges in no lengthy introduction, but hurries on with his narrative, omits what he cannot adorn, and never loses the thread of his story (128-152).

THE ART OF POETRY

If you want your play to succeed, you must study the "strange, eventful history" of human life, and note the characteristics of the several ages of man, so that the different periods may not be confused (153-178). Events may be set forth in action or, less preferably, in narrative. The latter method, however, must be used in the case of revolting and incredible incidents (179-188).

A play should be in five acts. The deus ex machina should be employed only rarely, and there should never be more than three characters on the stage at one time (189-192). The Chorus should take a real part in the action; it should not sing anything irrelevant, and should promote the cause of morality and religion (193-201). As to the music, the flute was once a simple instrument, which accompanied the chorus, and was not expected to fill large theatres as nowadays. With the growth of wealth and luxury in the state, and the consequent deterioration in the taste and character of the audience, the music became more florid and sensational, the diction more artificial, and the sentiments more obscure and oracular (202-219).

The satyric drama, with its chorus of goat-footed fauns, which was devised for spectators in their lighter moods, naturally assumed a gay and frolicsome tone as compared with the serious tragedy from which it sprang, but this does not warrant a writer in permitting his gods and heroes to use vulgar speech, or on the other hand in allowing them to indulge in ranting. There should be a happy mean between the language of tragedy and that of comedy. I would aim at a familiar style, so that anyone might think it easy to write in that fashion, but on trying would find out his mistake. The rustic fauns must not talk like city wits, nor yet use such coarse language that they will give offence to the better part of an audience (220-250).

HORACE

As to metre, the iambic is strictly a rapid measure, so that a senarius is counted as a trimeter. But the older poets admitted the spondee so freely, that it obscured the rhythm and made it heavy. In fact, it is not every critic that can detect unmusical verses, and too much freedom has been allowed our native poets. Shall I presume on this or shall I write with caution? If I follow the latter course, I may avoid criticism, but I shall not win praise. The proper course is to study Greek models night and day. He who is conversant with them will see that our fathers' admiration for the rhythms, as well as the wit, of Plautus, was uncalled for (251-274).

Thespis, we are told, invented Tragedy, and Aeschylus perfected it. Old Attic Comedy, too, won no little renown until its licence had to be checked by law and its chorus was silenced (275-284). Our Roman poets, besides following the Greeks, were bold enough to invent forms of a national drama, and might have rivalled their masters, had they taken more pains. I beg you, my friends, to condemn every poem which has not been subjected to the finishing touch (285-294).

The idea that genius is allied to madness is carried so far that many would-be poets are slovenly in appearance and neglect their health. It is not worth while to compose poetry at the expense of your wits, so, refraining from writing myself, I will teach the art to others, even as a whetstone can sharpen knives, though it cannot cut (295-308).

THE ART OF POETRY

The first essential is wisdom. This you can cultivate by study of the philosophers, and when you have first learned from them valuable lessons of life, you should apply yourself to life itself, and then your personages will speak like real living beings. Sometimes striking passages and characters properly portrayed commend a mediocre play better than do verses which lack substance, mere trifles, however melodious (309-322).

The Greeks had genius, eloquence, and ambition ; the Romans are too practical, even in their elementary schooling. How can we expect a people thus trained to develop poets ? Poetry aims at both instruction and pleasure. In your didactic passages, be not long-winded ; in your fiction, avoid extravagance. Combine the utile with the dulce, for only thus will you produce a book that will sell, and enjoy a wide and lasting fame (323-346).

Absolute perfection, however, is not to be expected, and we must allow for slight defects. When I come across a good line in a poor poem, I am surprised and amused ; I am merely grieved if Homer now and then nods (347-360). The critic must bear in mind that poetry is like painting. In each case the aim in view is to be considered. A miniature should bear close inspection ; a wall-painting is to be seen from a distance. One thing which may be tolerated in other fields, but which in the sphere of poetry, whose aim is to give pleasure, is never allowed, is mediocrity. Like the athlete, therefore, the poet needs training—a truth overlooked by many. But you are too sensible to make a mistake here. You will write only when Minerva is auspicious, and what you write you will submit to a good critic. Even then you will be in no haste to publish (361-390).

HORACE

Remember the glorious history of poetry, which—as the stories of Orpheus and Amphion show—has from the very infancy of the race promoted the cause of civilization. Then, from Homer on, it has inspired valour, has taught wisdom, has won the favour of princes, and has afforded relief after toil. Never need you be ashamed of the Muse (391-407).

The question has been asked whether it is natural ability or teaching that makes the poet. Both are necessary. However much people may boast of their gifts, ability without training will accomplish no more in writing than in running a race or in flute-playing (408-418).

It is easy for a rich poet to buy applause. Flatterers are like hired mourners at a funeral, who feel no grief, however much they may weep. So be not deceived, but take a lesson from those kings, who, acting on the adage in vino veritas, make men disclose the truth by plying them with wine (419-437).

Quintilius Varus was a frank and sincere critic, and if you would not take his advice he would leave you to your self-conceit. No honest man, for fear of giving offence, will conceal his friend's faults from him, for those faults may lead to serious consequences (438-452).

And think of the danger of a crazy poet roaming at large. First, there is danger for himself, for if, as he goes about with upturned gaze, he fall into a ditch, nobody will pull him out. Indeed, he may have gone in on purpose, like Empedocles, who, thinking himself divine, once leaped into burning Aetna. And secondly, there is danger for others, for if he is so stark, staring mad as to be ever making verses, he will become a public scourge, and if he catches some poor wretch he will fasten on him like a leech, and make him listen to his recitations until he has bored him to death (453-476) !

THE ART OF POETRY

The sketch of a crazy poet with which the poem closes corresponds to that of the crazy painter with which it opens. Both painter and poet are used to impress upon readers the lesson that in poetry as in other arts the main principle to be followed is propriety. This idea of literary propriety, which runs through the whole epistle, is illustrated in many ways, and may be said to give the Ars Poetica an artistic unity. (So Roy Kenneth Hack, "The Doctrine of Literary Forms" in Harvard Studies in Classical Philology, vol. xxvii., 1916.)

DE ARTE POETICA<sup>1</sup>

Humano capiti<sup>2</sup> cervicem pictor equinam
iungere si velit, et varias inducere plumas undique collatis membris, ut turpiter atrum desinat in piscem mulier formosa superne, spectatum admissi<sup>3</sup> risum teneatis, amici ? 5
credite, Pisones,<sup>4</sup> isti tabulae fore librum persimilem, cuius, velut aegri<sup>5</sup> somnia, vanae finguntur<sup>6</sup> species, ut nec pes nec caput uni reddatur formae. "pictoribus atque poetis quidlibet<sup>7</sup> audendi<sup>8</sup> semper fuit aequa potestas." 10
scimus, et hanc veniam petimusque damusque vicissim ;

sed non ut placidis coeant immitia, non ut
serpentes avibus gementur, tigribus agni.

Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis purpureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter 15
adsuitur pannus, cum lucus et ara Dianae et properantis aquae per amoenos ambitus agros aut flumen Rhenum aut pluvi<sup>9</sup>us describitur arcus.
sed nunc non erat his locus. et fortasse cupressum scis simulare : quid hoc, si fractis enatat exspes<sup>10</sup> 20

<sup>1</sup> For the Ars Poetica class I of the MSS. includes aBCKM, while class II includes Rφψδλπ.

<sup>2</sup> pectori B<sup>1</sup>. <sup>3</sup> missi BC. <sup>4</sup> pisonis, II. <sup>5</sup> aegris a<sup>1</sup>BR.

<sup>6</sup> funguntur B: finguntur or finguntur.

<sup>7</sup> quodlibet π.

<sup>8</sup> audiendi B.

<sup>9</sup> fluvi<sup>9</sup>us, II.

<sup>10</sup> expers, II.

THE ART OF POETRY

If a painter chose to join a human head to the neck of a horse, and to spread feathers of many a hue over limbs picked up now here now there, so that what at the top is a lovely woman ends below in a black and ugly fish, could you, my friends, if favoured with a private view, refrain from laughing? Believe me, dear Pisos, quite like such pictures would be a book, whose idle fancies shall be shaped like a sick man's dreams, so that neither head nor foot can be assigned to a single shape. "Painters and poets," you say, "have always had an equal right in hazarding anything." We know it: this licence we poets claim and in our turn we grant the like; but not so far that savage should mate with tame, or serpents couple with birds, lambs with tigers.

<sup>14</sup> Works with noble beginnings and grand promises often have one or two purple patches so stitched on as to glitter far and wide, when Diana's grove and altar, and

The winding stream a-speeding 'mid fair fields or the river Rhine, or the rainbow is being described.<sup>a</sup> For such things there is a place, but not just now. Perhaps, too, you can draw a cypress. But what of that, if you are paid to paint a sailor swimming from <sup>a</sup> These examples are doubtless taken from poems current in Horace's day.

HORACE

navibus, aere dato qui pingitur ? amphora coepit institui : currente rota cur urceus exit ?

denique sit quod vis,<sup>1</sup> simplex dumtaxat et unum.

Maxima pars vatum, pater et iuvenes patre digni, decipimur specie recti. brevis esse laboro, 25
obscurus fio ; sectantem leviam<sup>2</sup> nervi deficiunt animique ; professus grandia turget ;
serpit humi tutus nimium timidusque procellae :
qui variare cupit rem prodigialiter unam,
delphinum silvis appingit, fluctibus aprum. 30
in vitium ducit culpae fuga, si caret arte.

Aemilium circa ludum faber imus<sup>3</sup> et unguis
exprimet et mollis imitabitur aere capillos, infelix operis summa, quia ponere totum nesciet. hunc ego me,<sup>4</sup> si quid componere curem, 35 non magis esse velim, quam naso vivere pravo,<sup>5</sup> spectandum nigris oculis nigroque<sup>6</sup> capillo.

Sumite materiam vestris, qui scribitis, aequam
viribus et versate diu, quid ferre recusent, quid valeant umeri. cui lecta potenter erit res, 40
nec facundia deseret hunc nec lucidus ordo.
ordinis haec virtus erit et venus, aut<sup>7</sup> ego fallor, ut<sup>8</sup> iam nunc dicat iam nunc debentia dici,

<sup>1</sup> quidvis K Bentley.

<sup>2</sup> lenia Bentley.

<sup>3</sup> unus δ<sup>1</sup> Bentley.

<sup>4</sup> egomet δφψ.

<sup>5</sup> parvo δλπ.

<sup>6</sup> nigrove BCK.

<sup>7</sup> haut or haud BCK, II (except π).

<sup>8</sup> aut, II.

---

<sup>a</sup> One who has been saved from a shipwreck wants to put a picture of the scene as a votive offering in a temple.

<sup>b</sup> So the scholiasts, imus being local and meaning

THE ART OF POETRY, 21-43

his wrecked vessel in despair? <sup>a</sup> That was a wine-jar, when the moulding began: why, as the wheel runs round, does it turn out a pitcher? In short, be the work what you will, let it at least be simple and uniform.

<sup>24</sup> Most of us poets, O father and ye sons worthy of the father, deceive ourselves by the semblance of truth. Striving to be brief, I become obscure. Aiming at smoothness, I fail in force and fire. One promising grandeur, is bombastic; another, over-cautious and fearful of the gale, creeps along the ground. The man who tries to vary a single subject in monstrous fashion, is like a painter adding a dolphin to the woods, a boar to the waves. Shunning a fault may lead to error, if there be lack of art.

<sup>32</sup> Near the Aemilian School, at the bottom of the row, <sup>b</sup> there is a craftsman who in bronze will mould nails and imitate waving locks, but is unhappy in the total result, because he cannot represent a whole figure. Now if I wanted to write something, I should no more wish to be like him, than to live with my nose turned askew, though admired for my black eyes and black hair.

<sup>38</sup> Take a subject, ye writers, equal to your strength; and ponder long what your shoulders refuse, and what they are able to bear. Whoever shall choose a theme within his range, neither speech will fail him, nor clearness of order. Of order, this, if I mistake not, will be the excellence and charm that the author of the long-promised poem shall say at the moment what at that moment should be said,

"the last" of a number of shops. Some, however, take it in the sense of "humblest." Bentley's unus is to be taken closely with exprimet, "mould better than any others."

HORACE

pleraque differat et praesens in tempus omittat, hoc amet, hoc spernat<sup>1</sup> promissi carminis auctor. 45

In verbis etiam tenuis cautusque serendis<sup>2</sup> dixeris<sup>3</sup> egregie, notum si callida verbum reddiderit iunctura novum. si forte necesse est indiciis monstrare recentibus abdita rerum,<sup>4</sup> fingere cinctutis non exaudita Cethegis 50
continget, dabiturque licentia sumpta pudenter :
et nova fictaque<sup>5</sup> nuper habebunt verba fidem, si
Graeco fonte cadent<sup>6</sup> parce detorta. quid autem
Caecilio Plautoque dabit Romanus ademptum Vergilio Varioque<sup>7</sup> ? ego cur, adquirere pauca 55
si possum, invideor, cum lingua Catonis et Enni
sermonem patrium ditaverit et nova rerum nomina protulerit ? licuit semperque licebit signatum praesente nota producere<sup>8</sup> nomen.
ut silvae foliis<sup>9</sup> pronos mutantur in annos, 60
prima cadunt ; ita verborum vetus interit aetas,
et iuvenum ritu florent modo nata vigentque.
debemur morti nos nostraque : sive receptus
terra Neptunus classes Aquilonibus arcet, regis opus, sterilisve<sup>10</sup> palus diu aptaque remis 65

<sup>1</sup> spernet BC.

<sup>2</sup> Bentley transposed ll. 45 and 46, and has been followed by most editors. The scholiasts, however, had l. 45 preceding l. 46. Servius, too, though he cites l. 45 three times (on Aeneid, iv. 412, 415 ; Georgics, ii. 475) nowhere applies it to diction.

<sup>3</sup> dixerit B.

<sup>4</sup> rerum et, II.

<sup>5</sup> factaque.

<sup>6</sup> cadant a, Servius on Virg. Aen. vi. 34.

<sup>7</sup> Varoque φψδ.

<sup>8</sup> procudere Bentley.

<sup>9</sup> folia in silvis Diomedes.

<sup>10</sup> sterilisque, I (except a).

---

<sup>a</sup> Bentley's transposition of lines 45 and 46, making hoc . . . hoc refer to verbis, seems unnecessary. The traditional order is retained by Wickham and Rolfe. Horace deals first with the arrangement of argumentative material, 454

reserving and omitting much for the present, loving this point and scorning that.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>46</sup> Moreover, with a nice taste and care in weaving words together, you will express yourself most happily, if a skilful setting makes a familiar word new. If haply one must betoken abstruse things by novel terms, you will have a chance to fashion words never heard of by the kilted<sup>b</sup> Cethegi, and licence will be granted, if used with modesty; while words, though new and of recent make, will win acceptance, if they spring from a Greek fount and are drawn therefrom but sparingly.<sup>c</sup> Why indeed shall Romans grant this licence to Caecilius and Plautus, and refuse it to Virgil and Varius? And why should I be grudged the right of adding, if I can, my little fund, when the tongue of Cato and of Ennius has enriched our mother-speech and brought to light new terms for things? It has ever been, and ever will be, permitted to issue words stamped with the mint-mark of the day. As forests change their leaves with each year's decline, and the earliest drop off<sup>d</sup>: so with words, the old race dies, and, like the young of human kind, the new-born bloom and thrive. We are doomed to death—we and all things ours; whether Neptune, welcomed within the land, protects our fleets from northern gales—a truly royal work—or a marsh, long a waste where oars and in l. 46 passes to diction (cf. Fiske, Lucilius and Horace, p. 449 and note 50).

<sup>b</sup> The cinctus was a loin-cloth worn instead of the tunica by the Romans in days of old.

<sup>c</sup> As Wickham has seen, the metaphor is taken from irrigation; "the sluices must be opened sparingly."

<sup>d</sup> In Italian woods, as in Californian, leaves may stay on the trees two or even three years. Only the oldest (prima) drop off each autumn.

HORACE

vicinas urbes alit et grave sentit aratrum, seu cursum mutavit iniquum frugibus amnis
 doctus iter melius : mortalia facta peribunt,
 nedum sermonum stet honos et gratia vivax.
 multa renascentur quae iam cecidere, cadentque 70
 quae nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus,
 quem penes arbitrium est et ius et norma loquendi.

Res gestae regumque ducumque et tristia bella quo scribi possent numero, monstravit Homerus.
 versibus impariter iunctis querimonia primum, 75
 post etiam inclusa est voti sententia compos ;
 quis tamen exiguos elegos emisit auctor,
 grammatici certant et adhuc sub iudice lis est.
 Archilochum proprio rabies armavit iambo :
 hunc socci cepere pedem grandesque coturni 80
 alternis aptum sermonibus et popularis
 vincentem strepitus et natum rebus agendis.
 musa dedit fidibus divos puerosque deorum et pugilem victorem et equum certamine primum et iuvenum curas et libera vina referre. 85
 descriptas servare vices operumque colores

<sup>a</sup> Horace finds three illustrations of human achievement in certain engineering works planned by Julius Caesar or Augustus. These were: (1) the building of the Julian Harbour on the Campanian coast, where, under Agrippa, Lakes Avernus and Lucrinus were connected by a deep channel, and the sandy strip between the Lucrine Lake and the sea was pierced so as to admit ships from the Tuscan Sea; cf. Virgil, Georgics, ii. 161 ff.; (2) the draining of the Pomptine marshes, planned by Julius Caesar and perhaps executed by Augustus; (3) the straightening of the Tiber's course so as to protect Rome from floods.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Epistles ii. 2. 119. <sup>c</sup> The dactylic hexameter.

<sup>d</sup> The elegiac couplet, made up of a hexameter and a pentameter (hence impariter iunctis), was commonly used in inscriptions associated with votive offerings and expressed 456

THE ART OF POETRY, 66-86

were plied, feeds neighbouring towns and feels the weight of the plough ; or a river has changed the course which brought ruin to corn-fields and has learnt a better path<sup>a</sup> : all mortal things shall perish, much less shall the glory and glamour of speech endure and live. Many terms that have fallen out of use shall be born again, and those shall fall that are now in repute, if Usage so will it, in whose hands lies the judgement, the right and the rule of speech.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>73</sup> In what measure the exploits of kings and captains and the sorrows of war may be written, Homer has shown.<sup>c</sup> Verses yoked unequally first embraced lamentation, later also the sentiment of granted prayer<sup>d</sup> : yet who first put forth humble elegiacs, scholars dispute, and the case is still before the court. Rage armed Archilochus with his own iambus : this foot comic sock and high buskins alike adopted, as suited to alternate speech, able to drown the clamours of the pit, and by nature fit for action.<sup>e</sup> To the lyre the Muse granted tales of gods and children of gods, of the victor in boxing, of the horse first in the race, of the loves of swains, and of freedom over wine.<sup>f</sup> If I fail to keep and do not understand these well-marked shifts and shades of poetic forms,<sup>g</sup>

in the form of epigrams. The earliest elegiacs, however, were probably laments, such as those written by Archilochus on the loss of friends at sea.

* The iambic trimeter was the measure used in dialogue, both in comedies and tragedies. For Archilochus see Epist. i. 19. 23 ff.

† Greek lyric poetry embraced hymns to the gods and heroes, odes commemorating victories in the games, love poems, and drinking-songs. For Pindaric themes cf. Odes, iv. 2. 10-24.

‡ From here on Horace deals especially with dramatic poetry. Tone and style, diction and metre should all accord.

HORACE

cur ego si nequeo ignoroque poeta salutor ?
 cur nescire pudens prave quam discere malo ?
 versibus exponi tragicis res comica non volt ;
 indignatur item privatis ac prope socco 90
 dignis carminibus narrari cena Thyestae.
 singula quaeque locum teneant sortita decentem.<sup>1</sup>
 interdum tamen et vocem Comoedia tollit, iratusque Chremes tumido delitigat ore ;
 et tragicus plerumque dolet sermone pedestri 95
 Telephus et Peleus, cum pauper et exsul uterque proicit ampullas et sesquipedalia verba, si curat<sup>2</sup> cor spectantis tetigisse querella.

Non satis est pulchra esse poemata ; dulcia sunt et quocumque volent<sup>3</sup> animum auditoris agunto. 100
 ut ridentibus arrident, ita flentibus adsunt<sup>4</sup> humani voltus : si vis me flere, dolendum est primum ipsi tibi : tunc<sup>5</sup> tua me infortunia laedent, Telephe vel Peleu ; male si mandata loqueris,
 aut dormitabo aut ridebo. tristia maestum 105
 voltum verba decent, iratum plena minarum,
 ludentem lasciva, severum seria dictu.
 format enim Natura prius nos intus ad omnem fortunarum habitum ; iuvat aut impellit ad iram, aut ad humum maerore gravi deducit et angit ; 110
 post effert animi motus interprete lingua.
 si dicentis erunt fortunis absona dicta,
 Romani tollent equites peditesque cachinnum.
 intererit multum, divusne<sup>6</sup> loquatur an heros, maturusne senex an adhuc florente iuventa 115

<sup>1</sup> decentem VBK: decenter aCM, II.

<sup>2</sup> curas.

<sup>3</sup> volunt, II.

<sup>4</sup> adsunt MSS.: adflent Bentley.

<sup>5</sup> tum BCK.

<sup>6</sup> Davusne K.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Epist. i. 3. 14.

why am I hailed as poet ? Why through false shame do I prefer to be ignorant rather than to learn ? A theme for Comedy refuses to be set forth in verses of Tragedy ; likewise the feast of Thyestes scorns to be told in strains of daily life that well nigh befit the comic sock. Let each style keep the becoming place allotted it. Yet at times even Comedy raises her voice, and an angry Chremes storms in swelling tones ; so, too, in Tragedy Telephus and Peleus often grieve in the language of prose, when, in poverty and exile, either hero throws aside his bombast <sup>a</sup> and Brobdingnagian <sup>b</sup> words, should he want his lament to touch the spectator's heart.

<sup>99</sup> Not enough is it for poems to have beauty : they must have charm, and lead the hearer's soul where they will. As men's faces smile on those who smile, so they respond to those who weep. If you would have me weep, you must first feel grief yourself : then, O Telephus or Peleus, will your misfortunes hurt me : if the words you utter are ill suited, I shall laugh or fall asleep. Sad tones befit the face of sorrow ; blustering accents that of anger ; jests become the merry, solemn words the grave. For Nature first shapes us within to meet every change of fortune : she brings joy or impels to anger, or bows us to the ground and tortures us under a load of grief ; then, with the tongue for interpreter, she proclaims the emotions of the soul. If the speaker's words sound discordant with his fortunes, the Romans, in boxes and pit alike, will raise a loud guffaw. Vast difference will it make, whether a god be speaking or a hero, a ripe old man or one still in fervidus, et matrona potens an seditula nutrix, mercatorne vagus cultorne virentis<sup>1</sup> agelli, Colchus an Assyrius, Thebis nutritus an Argis.

<sup>b</sup> Sesquipedalia verba, lit. " words a foot and a half in length."

HORACE

Aut famam sequere aut sibi convenientia finge.
scriptor honoratum<sup>2</sup> si forte reponis Achillem, 120
impiger, iracundus, inexorabilis, acer,
iura neget sibi nata, nihil non arroget armis.
sit Medea ferox invictaque, flebilis Ino, perfidus Ixion, Io vaga, tristis Orestes.
si quid inexpertum scaenae committis et audes 125
personam formare novam, servetur ad imum,
qualis ab incepto processerit, et sibi constet.

Difficile est proprie communia dicere ; tuque
rectius Iliacum carmen deducis in actus, quam si proferres ignota indictaque primus. 130
publica materies privati iuris erit, si
non circa vilem patulumque moraberis orbem, nec verbo verbum<sup>3</sup> curabis reddere fidus interpret, nec desilies imitator in artum, unde pedem proferre pudor vetet aut operis lex. 135

<sup>1</sup> vigentis M, II.

<sup>2</sup> Homereum Bentley.

<sup>3</sup> verbum verbo C.

---

<sup>a</sup> The Assyrian would be effeminate, as compared with the Colchian, but both would be barbarians. The Theban Creon is a headstrong tyrant, while the Argive Agamemnon shows reserve and dignity.

<sup>b</sup> In the Iliad Achilles was first scorned by Agamemnon but in the sequel (Book IX, the embassy) highly honoured. Bentley conjectured that honoratum was a corruption of Homereum, "the Achilles of Homer," but we are dealing with a not uncommon use of the participle. So Elmore in C.R. xxxiii. (1919) p. 102; cf. Sat. i. 6. 126.

<sup>c</sup> By publica materies Horace means Homer and the epic field in general. A poet may make this his own by originality in the handling. Commentators are divided as to whether communia (l. 128) is identical with publica materies 460

the flower and fervour of youth, a dame of rank or a bustling nurse, a roaming trader or the tiller of a verdant field, a Colchian or an Assyrian, one bred at Thebes or at Argos.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>119</sup> Either follow tradition or invent what is self-consistent. If haply, when you write, you bring back to the stage the honouring of Achilles,<sup>b</sup> let him be impatient, passionate, ruthless, fierce; let him claim that laws are not for him, let him ever make appeal to the sword. Let Medea be fierce and unyielding, Ino tearful, Ixion forsworn, Io a wanderer, Orestes sorrowful. If it is an untried theme you entrust to the stage, and if you boldly fashion a fresh character, have it kept to the end even as it came forth at the first, and have it self-consistent.

<sup>128</sup> It is hard to treat in your own way what is common: and more properly are you spinning into acts a song of Troy than if, for the first time, you were giving the world a theme unknown and unsung. In ground open to all you will win private rights,<sup>c</sup> if you do not linger along the easy and open pathway, if you do not seek to render word for word as a slavish translator, and if in your copying you do not leap into the narrow well, out of which either shame or the laws of your task will keep you from stirring or not. The language is in the domain of law and as res communes, things common to all mankind, as the air and sea, differ from res publicae, things which belong to all citizens of a state, as its roads and theatres, so here communia covers a larger field than publica, and denotes characteristics which are common among mankind. These may be compared to the general truths (τὰ καθόλου) of Aristotle (Poet. ix.), as distinguished from particular ones (τὰ καθ' ἑκάστων). In Horace it is obvious that communia does not apply to Iliacum carmen, which does, however, come under the publica materies of the poet.

HORACE

nec sic incipies ut scriptor cyclicus olim :
 "fortunam Priami cantabo et nobile<sup>1</sup> bellum."
 quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatu ?
 parturient<sup>2</sup> montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.
 quanto rectius hic, qui nil molitur inepte : 140
 "dic mihi, Musa, virum, captae post tempora Troiae qui<sup>3</sup> mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes."
 non fumum ex fulgore, sed ex fumo dare lucem
 cogitat, ut speciosa dehinc miracula promat, Antiphaten Scyllamque et cum Cyclope Charybdin.
 nec reditum Diomedis ab interitu Meleagri, 146
 nec gemino bellum Troianum orditur ab ovo ;
 semper ad eventum festinat et in medias res
 non secus ac notas auditorem rapit, et quae desperat tractata nitescere posse, relinquit, 150
 atque ita mentitur, sic veris falsa remiscet,
 primo ne medium, medio ne discrepet imum.

Tu quid ego et populus mecum desideret audi, si plosoris<sup>4</sup> eges aulaea manentis et usque
 sessuri,<sup>5</sup> donec cantor "vos plaudite" dicat, 155
 aetatis cuiusque notandi sunt tibi mores, mobilibusque<sup>6</sup> decor naturis dandus et annis.
 reddere qui voces iam scit puer et pede certo
 signat humum, gestit paribus colludere, et iram

<sup>1</sup> cantarat nobile B.      <sup>2</sup> parturiunt.      <sup>3</sup> quis B.

<sup>4</sup> plosoris V, I: plus oris, II: plausoris B<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>5</sup> sessori B.      <sup>6</sup> nobilibusque B.

<sup>a</sup> Horace utilizes the fable of the goat that leapt into a well, but has nothing to say about the fox who persuaded him to do so.

<sup>b</sup> The opening of the Odyssey.

<sup>c</sup> Meleager was an uncle of Diomedes, and therefore of an older generation.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. from the birth of Helen.

<sup>e</sup> The cantor was probably the young slave who stood

THE ART OF POETRY, 136-159

a step.<sup>a</sup> And you are not to begin as the Cyclic poet of old :

Of Priam's fate and famous war I'll sing.

What will this boaster produce in keeping with such mouthing? Mountains will labour, to birth will come a laughter-rousing mouse! How much better he who makes no foolish effort :

Sing, Muse, for me the man who on Troy's fall
Saw the wide world, its ways and cities all.<sup>b</sup>

Not smoke after flame does he plan to give, but after smoke the light, that then he may set forth striking and wondrous tales—Antiphates, Scylla, Charybdis, and the Cyclops. Nor does he begin Diomedes's return from the death of Meleager,<sup>c</sup> or the war of Troy from the twin eggs.<sup>d</sup> Ever he hastens to the issue, and hurries his hearer into the story's midst, as if already known, and what he fears he cannot make attractive with his touch he abandons; and so skilfully does he invent, so closely does he blend facts and fiction, that the middle is not discordant with the beginning, nor the end with the middle.

<sup>153</sup> Now hear what I, and with me the public, expect. If you want an approving hearer, one who waits for the curtain, and will stay in his seat till the singer <sup>e</sup> cries "Give your applause," you must note the manners of each age, and give a befitting tone to shifting natures and their years. The child, who by now can utter words and set firm step upon the ground, delights to play with his mates, flies near the flute-player and sang the cantica of a play, while the actor gesticulated. All the comedies of Plautus and Terence close with plaudite or an equivalent phrase.

HORACE

colligit ac ponit temere et mutatur in horas. 160
 imberbis<sup>1</sup> iuvenis, tandem custode remoto, gaudet equis canibusque et aprici gramine Campi,
 cereus in vitium flecti, monitoribus asper,
 utilium tardus provisor, prodigus aeris,
 sublimis cupidusque et amata relinquere pernix. 165
 conversis studiis aetas animusque virilis
 quaerit opes et amicitias, inservit honori, commisisse cavet quod mox mutare<sup>2</sup> laboret.
 multa senem circumveniunt incommoda, vel quod quaerit et inventis miser abstinet ac timet uti, 170
 vel quod res omnis timide gelideque ministrat, dilator<sup>3</sup> spe longus, iners avidusque futuri,
 difficilis, querulus, laudator temporis acti
 se puero, castigator censorque minorum.
 multa ferunt anni venientes commoda secum, 175
 multa recedentes adimunt. ne forte seniles
 mandentur iuveni partes pueroque viriles, semper in adiunctis aevoque morabimur<sup>4</sup> aptis.<sup>5</sup> Aut agitur res in scaenis aut acta refertur.
 segnius irritant animos demissa per aurem 180
 quam quae sunt oculis subiecta fidelibus et quae ipse sibi tradit spectator : non tamen intus
 digna geri promes in scaenam, multaue tolles

<sup>1</sup> imberbis aB: imberbus VCM; cf. Epist. ii. 1. 85.

<sup>2</sup> mox mutare] permutare, II.

<sup>3</sup> delator B.

<sup>4</sup> morabitur B, II, Vollmer.

<sup>5</sup> apti B.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Campus Martius.

<sup>b</sup> Spe longus seems to be a translation of Aristotle's δύσελπις (Rhet. ii. 12), hence Bentley conjectured lentus for longus. It is, however, in view of Horace's spes longa (Odes, i. 4. 15; i. 11. 6) taken by some as "far-reaching in hope," the hope requiring a long time for fulfilment. Wickham suggests "patient in hope," but the quality is here one of the incommoda of age, not one of its blessings. The into a passion and as lightly puts it aside, and changes every hour. The beardless youth, freed at last from his tutor, finds joy in horses and hounds and the grass of the sunny Campus,<sup>a</sup> soft as wax for moulding to evil, peevish with his counsellors, slow to make needful provision, lavish of money, spirited, of strong desires, but swift to change his fancies. With altered aims, the age and spirit of the man seeks wealth and friends, becomes a slave to ambition, and is fearful of having done what soon it will be eager to change. Many ills encompass an old man, whether because he seeks gain, and then miserably holds aloof from his store and fears to use it, or because, in all that he does, he lacks fire and courage, is dilatory and slow to form hopes,<sup>b</sup> is sluggish and greedy of a longer life, peevish, surly, given to praising the days he spent as a boy, and to reproving and condemning the young. Many blessings do the advancing years bring with them; many, as they retire, they take away. So, lest haply we assign a youth the part of age, or a boy that of manhood, we shall ever linger over traits that are joined and fitted to the age.

179 Either an event is acted on the stage, or the action is narrated. Less vividly is the mind stirred by what finds entrance through the ears than by what is brought before the trusty eyes, and what the spectator can see for himself. Yet you will not bring upon the stage what should be performed behind the scenes, and you will keep much from our phrase is explanatory of dilator, even as avidus futuri explains iners, for unlike the youth, who is absorbed in the present, the old man fails to act promptly, because his heart is in the future, however brief that is to be.

HORACE

ex oculis, quae mox narret facundia praesens ;
 ne pueros coram populo Medea trucidet, 185
 aut humana palam coquat exta nefarius Atreus, aut in avem Procne vertatur, Cadmus in anguem.
 quodcumque ostendis mihi sic, incredulus odi.

Neve minor neu sit quinto productior actu fabula quae posci volt et spectata<sup>1</sup> reponi. 190
 nec deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus
 inciderit, nec quarta loqui persona laboret.

Actoris partis chorus officiumque virile defendat, neu quid medios intercinat actus quod non proposito conducat et haereat apte. 195
 ille bonis faveatque et consilietur amice,<sup>2</sup> et regat iratos et amet peccare timentis<sup>3</sup> ;
 ille dapes laudet mensae brevis, ille salubrem
 iustitiam legesque et apertis otia portis ;
 ille tegat commissa deosque precetur et oret 200
 ut redeat miseris, abeat fortuna superbis.

Tibia non, ut nunc, orichalco vincta<sup>4</sup> tubaeque aemula, sed tenuis simplexque foramine paucos<sup>5</sup> adspirare et adesse choris erat utilis atque nondum spissa nimis complere sedilia flatu : 205
 quo sane populus numerabilis, utpote parvus, et frugi castusque<sup>6</sup> verecundusque coibat.
 postquam coepit agros extendere victor et urbes
 latior amplecti murus, vinoque diurno placari Genius festis impune diebus, 210
 accessit numerisque modisque licentia maior.

<sup>1</sup> spectata δλπ: spectanda (exsp - BK) other MSS. Both known to scholiasts. The latter perhaps an early error, due to Sat. i. 10. 39.

<sup>2</sup> amici(s), II.

<sup>3</sup> pacare tumentes.

<sup>4</sup> iuncta CK.

<sup>5</sup> parvo, II (except π).

<sup>6</sup> cautusque C: catusque φψ.

<sup>a</sup> The deus ex machina. As vindex, he is to deliver men from difficulties seemingly insoluble.

THE ART OF POETRY, 184-211

eyes, which an actor's ready tongue will narrate anon in our presence ; so that Medea is not to butcher her boys before the people, nor impious Atreus cook human flesh upon the stage, nor Procne be turned into a bird, Cadmus into a snake. Whatever you thus show me, I discredit and abhor.

<sup>189</sup> Let no play be either shorter or longer than five acts, if when once seen it hopes to be called for and brought back to the stage. And let no god <sup>a</sup> intervene, unless a knot come worthy of such a deliverer, nor let a fourth actor essay to speak.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>193</sup> Let the Chorus sustain the part and strenuous duty of an actor, and sing nothing between acts which does not advance and fitly blend into the plot. It should side with the good and give friendly counsel ; sway the angry and cherish the righteous. It should praise the fare of a modest board, praise wholesome justice, law, and peace with her open gates ; should keep secrets, and pray and beseech the gods that fortune may return to the unhappy, and depart from the proud.

<sup>202</sup> The flute—not, as now, bound with brass and a rival of the trumpet, but slight and simple, with few stops—was once of use to lead and aid the chorus and to fill with its breath benches not yet too crowded, where, to be sure, folk gathered, easy to count, because few—sober folk, too, and chaste and modest. But when a conquering race began to widen its domain, and an ampler wall embraced its cities, and when, on festal days, appeasing the Genius<sup>c</sup> by daylight drinking brought no penalty, then both time and tune won greater licence. For what taste

<sup>b</sup> i.e. not more than three speaking characters are to be on the stage at once.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Epistles, ii. 1. 144.

HORACE

indoctus quid enim saperet liberque laborum
 rusticus urbano confusus, turpis honesto ?
 sic priscae motumque et luxuriam addidit arti
 tibicen traxitque vagus per pulpita vestem ; 215
 sic etiam fidibus voces crevere severis,
 et tulit eloquium insolitum facundia praeceps,
 utiliumque sagax rerum et divina futuri
 sortilegis non discrepuit sententia Delphis.

Carmine qui tragico vilem certavit ob hircum, 220
 mox etiam agrestis Satyros nudavit et asper incolumi gravitate iocum<sup>1</sup> temptavit, eo quod illecebris erat et grata novitate morandus spectator, functusque sacris et potus et exlex.
 verum ita risores, ita commendare dicaces 225
 conveniet Satyros, ita vertere seria ludo,
 ne quicumque deus, quicumque adhibebitur heros,
 regali conspectus in auro nuper et ostro,
 migret in obscuras humili sermone tabernas,
 aut, dum vitat humum, nubes et inania captet. 230
 effutire levis indigna Tragoedia versus,
 ut festis matrona moveri iussa diebus,
 intererit Satyris paulum pudibunda protervis.
 non ego inornata et dominantia nomina solum

<sup>1</sup> locum BKδπ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Horace seems to speak flippantly of the style of choruses in Greek tragedy. He assumes that as the music became more florid, both speech and thought also lost their simplicity, the former becoming dithyrambic, the latter oracular and obscure. It is probable, however, that he has in view the post-classical drama.

<sup>b</sup> Tragedy or "goat-song" was supposed to take its name from the prize of a goat. It was so called, however, because the singers were satyrs, dressed in goat-skins. Satyric drama, the subject of this passage, is closely connected with tragedy, and must not be handled as comedy.

468

could you expect of an unlettered throng just freed from toil, rustic mixed up with city folk, vulgar with nobly-born? So to the early art the flute-player added movement and display, and, strutting o'er the stage, trailed a robe in train. So, too, to the sober lyre new tones were given, and an impetuous style brought in an unwonted diction; and the thought, full of wise saws and prophetic of the future, was attuned to the oracles of Delphi.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>220</sup> The poet who in tragic song first competed for a paltry goat<sup>b</sup> soon also brought on unclad the woodland Satyrs, and with no loss of dignity roughly essayed jesting, for only the lure and charm of novelty could hold the spectator, who, after observance of the rites,<sup>c</sup> was well drunken and in lawless mood. But it will be fitting so to seek favour for your laughing, bantering Satyrs, so to pass from grave to gay, that no god, no hero, who shall be brought upon the stage, and whom we have just beheld in royal gold and purple, shall shift with vulgar speech into dingy hovels, or, while shunning the ground, catch at clouds and emptiness. Tragedy, scorning to babble trivial verses, will, like a matron bidden to dance on festal days, take her place in the saucy Satyrs' circle with some little shame. Not mine shall it be, ye Pisos, if writing Satyric plays, to

It came as a fourth play after a tragic trilogy. Horace treats this form as if it had developed out of tragedy, whereas in fact tragedy is an offshoot from it (see e.g. Barnett, The Greek Drama, p. 11). As for a Satyric drama in Latin, little is known about it, but Pomponius, according to Porphyrio on l. 221, wrote three Satyrica, viz. Atalanta, Sisyphus, and Ariadne.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. of Bacchus at the Dionysia, when plays were performed.

HORACE

verbaque, Pisones, Satyrorum scriptor amabo, 235
 nec sic enitar tragico differre colori, ut nihil intersit, Davusne loquatur et audax<sup>1</sup> Pythias, emuncto lucrata Simone talentum, an custos famulusque dei Silenus alumni.
 ex noto fictum carmen sequar, ut sibi quivis 240
 speret idem, sudet multum frustraue laboret
 ausus idem : tantum series iuncturaque pollet, tantum de medio sumptis accedit honoris.
 silvis deducti caveant me iudice Fauni,
 ne velut innati triviis ac paene forenses 245
 aut nimium teneris iuvenentur versibus umquam, aut immunda crepent ignominiosaue dicta :
 offenduntur enim, quibus est equus et pater et res,
 nec, si quid fricti<sup>2</sup> ciceris probat et nucis emptor, aequis accipiunt animis donantve<sup>3</sup> corona. 250

Syllaba longa brevi subiecta vocatur iambus, pes citus ; unde etiam trimetris accrescere iussit
 nomen iambeis, cum senos redderet ictus
 primus ad extremum similis sibi. non ita pridem,

<sup>1</sup> et audax VBCK: an audax a, II.

<sup>2</sup> fricti aMφψ: stricti C: fracti BKδπ.

<sup>3</sup> donantque π.

---

<sup>a</sup> For nomina verbaque cf. Sat. i. 3. 103. Plato (Cratylus, 431 B) uses ῥήματα and ὀνόματα to cover the whole of language. The epithet dominantia translates κύρια. Such words are the common, ordinary ones, which are contrasted with all that are in any way uncommon.

<sup>b</sup> Davus, Pythias and Simo are cited as names of typical characters in comedy (cf. Sat. i. 10. 40). On the other hand, Silenus, the jolly old philosopher, who was father of the Satyrs and guardian of the youthful Dionysus, appeared in Satyric dramas, e.g. the Cyclops of Euripides.

<sup>c</sup> By carmen Horace means poetic style, not plot, as some affect only the plain nouns and verbs of established use <sup>a</sup>; nor shall I strive so to part company with tragic tone, that it matters not whether Davus be speaking with shameless Pythias, who has won a talent by bamboozling Simo, or Silenus, who guards and serves his divine charge.<sup>b</sup> My aim shall be poetry,<sup>c</sup> so moulded from the familiar that anybody may hope for the same success, may sweat much and yet toil in vain when attempting the same: such is the power of order and connexion, such the beauty that may crown the commonplace. When the Fauns <sup>d</sup> are brought from the forest, they should, methinks, beware of behaving as though born at the crossways and almost as dwelling in the Forum, playing at times the young bloods with their mawkish verses, or cracking their bawdy and shameless jokes. For some take offence—knights, free-born, and men of substance—nor do they greet with kindly feelings or reward with a crown everything which the buyers of roasted beans and chestnuts <sup>e</sup> approve.

<sup>251</sup> A long syllable following a short is called an iambus—a light foot; hence it commanded that the name of trimeters should attach itself to iambic lines, though it yielded six beats, being from first to last the same throughout.<sup>f</sup> But not so long ago, that it have taken it. Thus ll. 240-243 are in harmony with those that precede and those that follow. The word fictum suggests that this style will look like a new creation. This is to seem easy enough to tempt others to try it.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. Satyrs. These wild creatures of the woods must not speak as though they were natives of the city, whether vulgar and coarse or refined and sentimental.

<sup>e</sup> These are still cheap and popular articles of food in Italy.

<sup>f</sup> An iambic trimeter contains six feet, but it takes two feet to make one metrum.

HORACE

tardior ut paulo graviorque veniret ad auris, 255
 spondeos stabilis in iura paterna recepit commodus et patiens, non ut de sede secunda cederet aut quarta socialiter. hic et in Acci nobilibus trimetris apparet rarus, et Enni 260 in scaenam missos cum magno pondere versus aut operae celeris nimium<sup>1</sup> curaque carentis aut ignoratae premit artis crimine turpi.
 non quivis videt immodulata poemata iudex,
 et data Romanis venia est indigna poetis.
 idcircone vager scribamque licenter? an omnis 265
 visuros peccata putem mea, tutus et intra spem veniae cautus? vitavi denique culpam,
 non laudem merui. vos exemplaria Graeca
 nocturna versate manu, versate diurna.
 at vestri proavi Plautinos et numeros et 270
 laudavere sales, nimium patienter utrumque,
 ne dicam stulte, mirati, si modo ego et vos
 scimus inurbanum lepido seponere dicto
 legitimumque sonum digitis callemus et aure.
 Ignotum tragicæ genus invenisse Camenæ 275
 dicitur et plaustis vexisse poemata Thespis, quæ canerent agerentque peruncti faecibus ora.<sup>2</sup>
 post hunc personæ pallæque repertor honestæ Aeschylus et modicis instravit pulpita tignis et docuit magnumque loqui nitique cothurno. 280

<sup>1</sup> nimium celeris a.

<sup>2</sup> ora aKM, II: atris BC.

<sup>a</sup> The admission of spondees to the odd places in the trimeter, though mentioned by Horace as recent, is really very old. Pure iambic trimeters are occasionally used by Catullus and by Horace (Epode xvi.).

<sup>b</sup> The epithet given by this poet's admirers. Cf. Epist. i. 19. 39. <sup>c</sup> See notes on Epist. ii. 1. 170-176.

<sup>d</sup> Jestings from wagons (τὰ ἐξ ἀμάξης σκώμματα), in the processions which formed a feature of the vintage celebration, 472

might reach the ears with somewhat more slowness and weight, it admitted the steady spondees to its paternal rights,<sup>a</sup> being obliging and tolerant, but not so much so as to give up the second and fourth places in its friendly ranks. In the "noble"<sup>b</sup> trimeters of Accius this iambus appears but seldom; and on the verses which Ennius hurled ponderously upon the stage it lays the shameful charge either of hasty and too careless work or of ignorance of the art. Not every critic discerns unmusical verses, and so undeserved indulgence has been granted our Roman poets. Am I therefore to run loose and write without restraint? Or, supposing that all will see my faults, shall I seek only safety and take care to keep within hope of pardon? At the best I have escaped censure, I have earned no praise. For yourselves, handle Greek models by night, handle them by day. Yet your forefathers, you say, praised both the measures and the wit of Plautus. Too tolerant, not to say foolish, was their admiration of both, if you and I but know how to distinguish coarseness from wit, and with fingers and ear can catch the lawful rhythm.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>275</sup> Thespis is said to have discovered the Tragic Muse, a type unknown before, and to have carried his pieces in wagons to be sung and acted by players with faces smeared with wine-lees.<sup>d</sup> After him Aeschylus, inventor of the mask and comely robe, laid a stage of small planks, and taught a lofty speech and stately gait on the buskin. To these succeeded is associated, not with Tragedy, but with Comedy. Horace seems to confuse the two. The words peruncti faecibus ora are an allusion to τρύγφδια, a term used of comedy (cf. Aristophanes, Acharnians, 499, 500), and derived from τρυξ, "wine-lees."

HORACE

successit vetus his comoedia, non sine multa laude ; sed in vitium libertas excidit et vim dignam lege regi : lex est accepta chorusque
turpiter obticuit sublato iure nocendi.

Nil intemptatum nostri liquere poetae, 285
nec minimum meruere decus vestigia Graeca
ausi deserere et celebrare domestica facta,
vel qui praetextas vel qui docuere togatas.
nec virtute foret clarisve<sup>1</sup> potentius armis
quam lingua Latium, si non offenderet unum 290
quemque poetarum limae labor et mora. vos, o Pompilius sanguis, carmen reprehendite quod non multa dies et multa litura coercuit atque praesectum<sup>2</sup> deciens non castigavit ad unguem.

Ingenium misera quia fortunatius arte 295
credit et excludit sanos Helicone poetas Democritus, bona pars non unguis ponere curat,
non barbam,<sup>3</sup> secreta petit loca, balnea vitat.
nanciscetur enim pretium nomenque poetae,
si tribus Anticyris caput insanabile numquam 300
tonsori Licino commiserit. o ego laevus,
qui purgor bilem sub verni temporis horam !
non alius faceret meliora poemata : verum
nil tanti est. ergo fungar vice cotis, acutum reddere quae ferrum valet, exsors ipsa<sup>4</sup> secandi; 305

<sup>1</sup> clarisque BCK.

<sup>2</sup> praesectum VBC: perspectrum π: perfectum a, II.

<sup>3</sup> barbas B.

<sup>4</sup> exsortita aBCMRπ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Fabulae praetextae (or praetextatae) were tragedies with Roman themes, so called because of the toga praetexta worn by the actors. Similarly comedies, in which Roman citizens appeared, were called togatae. Cf. Epist. ii. 1. 57, and note e.

Old Comedy, and won no little credit, but its freedom sank into excess and a violence deserving to be checked by law. The law was obeyed, and the chorus to its shame became mute, its right to injure being withdrawn.

<sup>285</sup> Our own poets have left no style untried, nor has least honour been earned when they have dared to leave the footsteps of the Greeks and sing of deeds at home, whether they have put native tragedies or native comedies upon the stage.<sup>a</sup> Nor would Latium be more supreme in valour and glory of arms than in letters, were it not that her poets, one and all, cannot brook the toil and tedium of the file. Do you, O sons of Pompilius,<sup>b</sup> condemn a poem which many a day and many a blot has not restrained and refined ten times over to the test of the close-cut nail.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>295</sup> Because Democritus believes that native talent is a greater boon than wretched art, and shuts out from Helicon poets in their sober senses, a goodly number take no pains to pare their nails or to shave their beards; they haunt lonely places and shun the baths—for surely one will win the esteem and name of poet if he never entrusts to the barber Licinus a head that three Anticyras cannot cure.<sup>d</sup> Ah, fool that I am, who purge me of my bile as the season of spring comes on! Not another man would compose better poems. Yet it's not worth while.<sup>e</sup> So I'll play a whetstone's part, which makes steel sharp, but of itself cannot cut. Though I write

<sup>b</sup> The Calpurnii are said to have been descended from Calpus, one of the sons of Numa Pompilius.

<sup>c</sup> A metaphor from sculpture; cf. Sat. i. 5. 32.

<sup>d</sup> Cf. Sat. ii. 3. 82, 166.

<sup>e</sup> Viz. to write poetry and lose your wits.

HORACE

munus et officium, nil scribens ipse, docebo, unde parentur opes, quid alat formetque poetam, quid deceat,<sup>1</sup> quid non, quo virtus, quo ferat error.

Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et fons.
rem tibi Socraticae poterunt ostendere chartae, 310
verbaque provisam rem non invita sequentur.
qui didicit patriae quid debeat et quid amicis,
quo sit amore parens, quo frater amandus et hospes,
quod sit conscripti, quod iudicis officium, quae
partes in bellum missi ducis, ille profecto 315
reddere personae scit convenientia cuique.
respicere exemplar vitae morumque iubebo
doctum imitatorem et vivas hinc ducere voces.
interdum speciosa locis<sup>2</sup> morataque recte fabula nullius veneris, sine pondere et arte, 320
valdius oblectat populum meliusque moratur
quam versus inopes rerum nugaeque canorae.

Grais ingenium, Grais dedit ore rotundo
Musa loqui, praeter laudem nullius avaris.
Romani pueri longis rationibus assem 325
discunt in partis centum diducere. "dicat filius Albani<sup>3</sup> : si de quincunce remota est uncia, quid superat? poteras<sup>4</sup> dixisse." "triens."
"eu !

rem poteris servare tuam. redit uncia, quid fit ? "
"semis." an,<sup>5</sup> haec animos aerugo et cura peculi 330

<sup>1</sup> doceat aRδ.

<sup>2</sup> iocis K, II.

<sup>3</sup> Albini, II.

<sup>4</sup> poterat a, II.

<sup>5</sup> an VB: ad aCMK, II.

<sup>a</sup> I take doctum as a repetition of qui didicit (l. 312). The drama is an imitation of life, and the would-be dramatist who has first learned about life from his studies should next turn to real life and make his own observations.

<sup>b</sup> Some take locis as equivalent to sententiis, moral reflections or commonplaces, which may be used anywhere.

naught myself, I will teach the poet's office and duty ; whence he draws his stores ; what nurtures and fashions him ; what befits him and what not ; whither the right course leads and whither the wrong.

<sup>309</sup> Of good writing the source and fount is wisdom. Your matter the Socratic pages can set forth, and when matter is in hand words will not be loath to follow. He who has learned what he owes his country and his friends, what love is due a parent, a brother, and a guest, what is imposed on senator and judge, what is the function of a general sent to war, he surely knows how to give each character his fitting part. I would advise one who has learned the imitative art to look to life and manners for a model, and draw from thence living words.<sup>a</sup> At times a play marked by attractive passages<sup>b</sup> and characters fitly sketched, though lacking in charm, though without force and art, gives the people more delight and holds them better than verses void of thought, and sonorous trifles.

<sup>323</sup> To the Greeks the Muse gave native wit, to the Greeks she gave speech in well-rounded phrase<sup>c</sup> ; they craved naught but glory. Our Romans, by many a long sum, learn in childhood to divide the as into a hundred parts. " Let the son of Albinus answer.<sup>d</sup> If from five-twelfths one ounce be taken, what remains ? You might have told me by now." " A third." " Good ! you will be able to look after your means. An ounce is added ; what's the result ? " " A half." When once this canker, this lust of petty

<sup>c</sup> Ore rotundo is here used of style, not utterance.

<sup>d</sup> This is a school-lesson in arithmetic. The Romans used a duodecimal system (their as being divided into twelve ounces), and the children learn to reduce figures to decimals (in partes centum).

HORACE

cum semel imbuerit, speramus<sup>1</sup> carmina fingi
posse linenda cedro et levi servanda cupresso ?

Aut prodesse volunt aut delectare poetae
aut simul et iucunda et idonea dicere vitae.
quidquid praecipies, esto brevis, ut cito dicta 335
percipiant animi dociles teneantque fideles :
omne supervacuum pleno de pectore manat.
ficta voluptatis causa sint proxima veris,
ne<sup>2</sup> quodcumque velit<sup>3</sup> poscat sibi fabula credi,
neu pransae Lamiae vivum puerum extrahat alvo. 340
centuriae seniorum agitant expertia frugis,
celsi praetereunt austera poemata Ramnes :
omne tulit punctum qui miscuit utile dulci,
lectorem delectando pariterque monendo.
hic meret aera<sup>4</sup> liber Sosiis, hic et mare transit 345 et longum noto scriptori prorogat aevum.

Sunt delicta tamen quibus ignovisse velimus :
nam neque chorda sonum reddit, quem volt manus
et mens,
poscentique gravem persaepe remittit acutum ;
nec semper feriet quodcumque minabitur arcus. 350
verum ubi plura nitent in carmine, non ego paucis
offendar maculis, quas aut incuria fudit aut humana parum cavit natura. quid ergo est ?
ut scriptor si peccat idem librarius usque, quamvis est monitus, venia caret, et<sup>5</sup> citharoedus 355 ridetur, chorda qui semper oberrat<sup>6</sup> eadem :

<sup>1</sup> speremus, II.	<sup>2</sup> nec BC.	<sup>3</sup> volet, II.
<sup>4</sup> aere C, II (but not π).	<sup>5</sup> ut.	<sup>6</sup> oberret aM.

<sup>a</sup> Lamia was "a bugbear of the Greek nursery."

<sup>b</sup> An ancient classification of the citizens into seniores and iuniores is here referred to. The former were between the ages of forty-six and sixty. The terms Ramnes, Tities, and Luceres were applied to the three centuries of equites gain has stained the soul, can we hope for poems to be fashioned, worthy to be smeared with cedar-oil, and kept in polished cypress ?

<sup>333</sup> Poets aim either to benefit, or to amuse, or to utter words at once both pleasing and helpful to life. Whenever you instruct, be brief, so that what is quickly said the mind may readily grasp and faithfully hold : every word in excess flows away from the full mind. Fictions meant to please should be close to the real, so that your play must not ask for belief in anything it chooses, nor from the Ogress's <sup>a</sup> belly, after dinner, draw forth a living child. The centuries of the elders chase from the stage what is profitless ; the proud Ramnes disdain poems <sup>b</sup> devoid of charms. He has won every vote who has blended profit and pleasure, at once delighting and instructing the reader. That is the book to make money for the Sosii <sup>c</sup> ; this the one to cross the sea and extend to a distant day its author's fame.

<sup>347</sup> Yet faults there are which we can gladly pardon ; for the string does not always yield the sound which hand and heart intend, but when you call for a flat often returns you a sharp ; nor will the bow always hit whatever mark it threatens. But when the beauties in a poem are more in number, I shall not take offence at a few blots which a careless hand has let drop, or human frailty has failed to avert. What, then, is the truth ? As a copying clerk is without excuse if, however much warned, he always makes the same mistake, and a harper is laughed at who always blunders on the same string :

formed by Romulus, so that " Ramnes " is here used for the young aristocrats.

<sup>c</sup> For the Sosii, famous booksellers, cf. Epist. i. 20. 2.

HORACE

sic mihi, qui multum cessat, fit Choerilus ille, quem bis terve<sup>1</sup> bonum cum risu miror ; et idem
indignor quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus, verum operi<sup>2</sup> longo fas est obrepere somnum. 360

Ut pictura poesis : erit quae, si propius stes,
te capiat magis, et quaedam, si longius abstes.
haec amat obscurum, volet haec sub luce videri,
iudicis argutum quae non formidat acumen ;
haec placuit semel, haec deciens repetita placebit. 365

O maior iuvenum, quamvis et voce paterna
fingeris ad rectum et per te sapis, hoc tibi dictum tolle memor, certis medium et tolerabile rebus recte concedi. consultus iuris et actor
causarum mediocris abest virtute diserti 370
Messallae, nec scit<sup>3</sup> quantum Cascellius Aulus, sed tamen in pretio est : mediocribus esse poetis
non homines, non di, non concessere columnae.
ut gratas inter mensas symphonia discors 374
et crassum unguentum et Sardo cum melle papaver offendunt, poterat duci quia cena sine istis :
sic animis natum inventumque poema iuvandis,
si paulum summo decessit, vergit<sup>4</sup> ad imum.
ludere qui nescit, campestribus abstinet armis, indoctusque pilae discive trochive quiescit, 380
ne spissae risum tollant impune coronae :
qui nescit versus tamen audet fingere. quidni ?
liber et ingenuus, praesertim census equestrem
summam nummorum vitioque remotus ab omni.

<sup>1</sup> terque aCM.

<sup>2</sup> opere δ: opere in aM.

<sup>3</sup> nec scit VB: nescit aCM.

<sup>4</sup> pergit BC.

<sup>a</sup> Dormitat = ἀπονυστάζει. Cf. ἐν ἐπιστολῇ γράψας . . . ἀπονυστάζειν τὸν Δημοσθένην (Plutarch, Cicero, 24).

<sup>b</sup> Poppy-seeds, when roasted and served with honey, were considered a delicacy, but were spoilt if the honey had a bitter flavour.

THE ART OF POETRY, 357-384

so the poet who often defaults, becomes, methinks, another Choerilus, whose one or two good lines cause laughter and surprise ; and yet I also feel aggrieved, whenever good Homer " nods,"<sup>a</sup> but when a work is long, a drowsy mood may well creep over it.

<sup>361</sup> A poem is like a picture : one strikes your fancy more, the nearer you stand ; another, the farther away. This courts the shade, that will wish to be seen in the light, and dreads not the critic insight of the judge. This pleased but once ; that, though ten times called for, will always please.

<sup>366</sup> O you elder youth, though wise yourself and trained to right judgement by a father's voice, take to heart and remember this saying, that only some things rightly brook the medium and the bearable. A lawyer and pleader of middling rank falls short of the merit of eloquent Messalla, and knows not as much as Aulus Cascellius, yet he has a value. But that poets be of middling rank, neither men nor gods nor booksellers ever brooked. As at pleasant banquets an orchestra out of tune, an unguent that is thick, and poppy-seeds served with Sardinian honey,<sup>b</sup> give offence, because the feast might have gone on without them : so a poem, whose birth and creation are for the soul's delight, if in aught it falls short of the top, sinks to the bottom. He who cannot play a game, shuns the weapons of the Campus,<sup>c</sup> and, if unskilled in ball or quoit or hoop, remains aloof, lest the crowded circle break out in righteous laughter. Yet the man who knows not how dares to frame verses. Why not ? He is free, even free-born, nay, is rated at the fortune of a knight, and stands clear from every blemish.

<sup>a</sup> The Campus Martius in Rome.

HORACE

Tu nihil invita dices faciesve<sup>1</sup> Minerva ; 385
 id tibi iudicium est, ea mens. si quid tamen olim scripseris, in Maeci descendat iudicis auris et patris et nostras, nonumque prematur in annum, membranis intus positis : delere licebit
 quod non edideris ; nescit vox missa reverti. 390

Silvestris homines sacer interpresque deorum
 caedibus et victu foedo deterruit Orpheus, dictus ob hoc lenire tigris rabidosque<sup>2</sup> leones.
 dictus et Amphion, Thebanæ conditor urbis,<sup>3</sup>
 saxa movere sono testudinis et prece blanda 395
 ducere quo vellet. fuit hæc sapientia quondam,
 publica privatis secernere, sacra profanis,
 concubitu prohibere vago, dare iura maritis,
 oppida moliri, leges incidere ligno.
 sic honor et nomen divinis vatibus atque 400
 carminibus venit. post hos insignis Homerus Tyrtaeusque mares animos in Martia bella versibus exacuit ; dictæ per carmina sortes, et vitæ monstrata via est, et gratia regum Pieriis temptata modis, ludusque repertus 405 et longorum operum finis : ne forte pudori sit tibi Musa lyrae sollers et cantor Apollo.

<sup>1</sup> faciesque aM.

<sup>2</sup> rapidos aCM, II.

<sup>3</sup> arcis aM.

<sup>a</sup> The phrase invita Minerva is explained by Cicero, De off. i. 31. 10, as meaning adversante et repugnante natura ; cf. "crassa Minerva," Sat. ii. 2. 3.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Sat. i. 10. 38.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Epist. i. 20. 6.

<sup>d</sup> The laws of Solon were published thus.

<sup>e</sup> The first poets were inspired teachers.

<sup>f</sup> Tyrtaeus, who according to tradition was a lame Attic schoolmaster, composed marching-songs and martial elegies for the Spartans in the seventh century B.C.

THE ART OF POETRY, 385-407

<sup>385</sup> But you will say nothing and do nothing against Minerva's will<sup>a</sup>; such is your judgement, such your good sense. Yet if ever you do write anything, let it enter the ears of some critical Maecius,<sup>b</sup> and your father's, and my own; then put your parchment in the closet and keep it back till the ninth year. What you have not published you can destroy; the word once sent forth can never come back.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>391</sup> While men still roamed the woods, Orpheus, the holy prophet of the gods, made them shrink from bloodshed and brutal living; hence the fable that he tamed tigers and ravening lions; hence too the fable that Amphion, builder of Thebes's citadel, moved stones by the sound of his lyre, and led them whither he would by his supplicating spell. In days of yore, this was wisdom, to draw a line between public and private rights, between things sacred and things common, to check vagrant union, to give rules for wedded life, to build towns, and grave laws on tables of wood<sup>d</sup>; and so honour and fame fell to bards and their songs, as divine.<sup>e</sup> After these Homer won his renown, and Tyrtaeus<sup>f</sup> with his verses fired manly hearts for battles of Mars. In song oracles were given, and the way of life was shown<sup>g</sup>; the favour of kings was sought in Pierian strains,<sup>h</sup> and mirth was found to close toil's long spell.<sup>i</sup> So you need not blush for the Muse skilled in the lyre, and for Apollo, god of song.

<sup>a</sup> In didactic poetry such as Hesiod's, and gnomic poetry such as Solon's.

<sup>b</sup> A reference to Pindar, Simonides, and Bacchylides.

<sup>c</sup> The ludus is such festal mirth as was exhibited in the dramatic performances of the Dionysia. Cf. Epist. ii. 1. 139 ff.

HORACE

Natura fieret laudabile carmen an arte,
 quaesitum est : ego nec studium sine divite vena, nec rude quid prosit<sup>1</sup> video ingenium : alterius sic 410 altera poscit opem res et coniurat amice.
 qui studet optatam cursu contingere metam,
 multa tulit fecitque puer, sudavit et alsit,
 abstinuit Venere et vino ; qui Pythia cantat tibicen, didicit prius extimuitque magistrum. 415
 nunc<sup>2</sup> satis est<sup>3</sup> dixisse : " ego mira poemata pango ;
 occupet extremum scabies ; mihi turpe relinqui est
 et quod non didici sane nescire fateri."

Ut praeco, ad merces turbam qui cogit emendas, adsentatores iubet ad lucrum ire poeta 420
 dives agris,<sup>4</sup> dives positis in faenore nummis.
 si<sup>5</sup> vero est, unctum qui recte ponere possit et spondere levi pro paupere et eripere atris<sup>6</sup> litibus implicitum, mirabor, si sciet internoscere mendacem verumque beatus amicum. 425
 tu seu donaris seu quid donare voles cui,<sup>7</sup> nolito ad versus tibi factos ducere plenum
 laetitiae : clamabit enim " pulchre ! bene ! recte !"
 pallescet super his, etiam stillabit amicis
 ex oculis rorem, saliet, tundet pede terram. 430
 ut qui conducti plorant in funere dicunt et faciunt prope plura dolentibus ex animo, sic derisor vero plus laudatore movetur.
 reges dicuntur multis urgere culullis

<sup>1</sup> possit.      <sup>2</sup> nec.      <sup>3</sup> et BC.      <sup>4</sup> agri BC.

<sup>5</sup> sin λπ.      <sup>6</sup> artis: so Bentley.      <sup>7</sup> qui B: quoi V.

<sup>a</sup> An allusion to a game of tag, in which the children cried:
 hábeat scabiem quisquis ad me vénerit novíssimus.

Horace means that people play at poetry like children. Cf.
Ep. i. 1. 59.

408 Often it is asked whether a praiseworthy poem be due to Nature or to art. For my part, I do not see of what avail is either study, when not enriched by Nature's vein, or native wit, if untrained ; so truly does each claim the other's aid, and make with it a friendly league. He who in the race-course craves to reach the longed-for goal, has borne much and done much as a boy, has sweated and shivered, has kept aloof from wine and women. The flautist who plays at the Pythian games, has first learned his lessons and been in awe of a master. To-day 'tis enough to say : " I fashion wondrous poems : the devil take the hindmost ! " 'Tis unseemly for me to be left behind, and to confess that I really do not know what I have never learned."

419 Like the crier, who gathers a crowd to the auction of his wares, so the poet bids flatterers flock to the call of gain, if he is rich in lands, and rich in moneys put out at interest. But if he be one who can fitly serve a dainty dinner, and be surety for a poor man of little credit, or can rescue one entangled in gloomy suits-at-law, I shall wonder if the happy fellow will be able to distinguish between a false and a true friend. And you, if you have given or mean to give a present to anyone, do not bring him, in the fulness of his joy, to hear verses you have written. For he will call out " Fine ! good ! perfect ! " He will change colour over them ; he will even distil the dew from his friendly eyes, he will dance and thump the ground with his foot. As hired mourners at a funeral say and do almost more than those who grieve at heart, so the man who mocks is more moved than the true admirer. Kings, we are told, ply with many a bumper and test with et torquere mero, quem perspexisse laborent,<sup>1</sup> 435

HORACE

 an sit amicitia dignus : si carmina condes, numquam te fallent<sup>2</sup> animi sub volpe latentes.

Quintilio si quid recitares, "corrige, sodes,
 hoc," aiebat, "et hoc." melius te posse negares bis terque expertum frustra, delere iubebat 440 et male tornatos<sup>3</sup> incudi reddere versus.
 si defendere delictum quam vertere malles,
 nullum ultra verbum aut operam insumebat inanem,
 quin sine rivali teque et tua solus amares.
 vir bonus et prudens versus reprehendet inertis, 445
 culpabit duros, incompetis allinet atrum transverso calamo signum, ambitiosa recidet ornamenta, parum claris lucem dare coget,
 arguet ambigue dictum, mutanda notabit,
 fiet Aristarchus ; nec<sup>4</sup> dicet: "cur ego amicum 450
 offendam in nugis ?" hae nugae seria ducent
 in mala derisum semel exceptumque sinistre.

Ut mala quem scabies aut morbus regius urget aut fanaticus error et iracunda Diana, vesanum tetigisse timent fugientque<sup>5</sup> poëtam 455
 qui sapiunt ; agitant pueri incautique sequuntur.
 hic, dum sublimis versus ructatur et errat,

<sup>1</sup> laborant, II (not φ).

<sup>2</sup> fallant φψδ.

<sup>3</sup> torquatos E: ter natos Bentley.

<sup>4</sup> non, II.

<sup>5</sup> fugientque aE: fugientque M: fugiuntque K.

---

<sup>a</sup> In one of Aesop's fables, the crow, yielding to the fox's flattery, drops the cheese he has found.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. Quintilius Varus, whose death is lamented in Odes, i. 24.

<sup>c</sup> The name of Aristarchus, famous as an Homeric scholar of Alexandria in the second century B.C., had become proverbial as that of a keen critic.

wine the man they are anxious to see through, whether he be worthy of their friendship. If you mean to fashion verses, never let the intent that lurks beneath the fox ensnare you.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>438</sup> If you ever read aught to Quintilius,<sup>b</sup> he would say : " Pray correct this and this." If, after two or three vain trials, you said you could not do better, he would bid you blot it out, and return the ill-shaped verses to the anvil. If you preferred defending your mistake to amending it, he would waste not a word more, would spend no fruitless toil, to prevent your loving yourself and your work alone without a rival. An honest and sensible man will censure lifeless lines, he will find fault with harsh ones ; if they are graceless, he will draw his pen across and smear them with a black stroke ; he will cut away pretentious ornament ; he will force you to flood the obscure with light, will convict the doubtful phrase, will mark what should be changed, will prove an Aristarchus.<sup>c</sup> He will not say, " Why should I give offence to a friend about trifles ? " These trifles will bring that friend into serious trouble, if once he has been laughed down and given an unlucky reception.

<sup>453</sup> As when the accursed itch plagues a man, or the disease of kings,<sup>d</sup> or a fit of frenzy and Diana's wrath,<sup>e</sup> so men of sense fear to touch a crazy poet and run away ; children tease and pursue him rashly. He, with head upraised, splutters verses and off he strays ;

<sup>a</sup> The morbis regius, said to be so called because the patient was treated with costly remedies, which only the rich (reges) could afford, was our jaundice and was supposed to be contagious.

<sup>e</sup> " Lunacy " was supposed to be caused by the moon, and the moon-goddess was Diana.

HORACE

si<sup>1</sup> veluti merulis intentus decedit auceps
 in puteum foveamve, licet "succurrite" longum clamet "io cives!" non sit qui tollere curet. 460
 si curet quis opem ferre et demittere<sup>2</sup> funem,
 "qui scis, an prudens huc se deiecerit<sup>3</sup> atque servari nolit?" dicam, Siculique poetae narrabo interitum. deus immortalis haberi dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem frigidus Aetnam insiluit. sit ius liceatque perire poetis : 466
 invitum qui servat, idem facit occidenti.
 nec semel hoc fecit, nec, si retractus erit, iam
 fiet homo et ponet famosae mortis amorem.
 nec satis apparet, cur versus factitet, utrum 470
 minxerit in patrios cineres, an triste bidental
 moverit incestus : certe furit, ac velut ursus, obiectos<sup>4</sup> caveae valuit si frangere clatros,
 indoctum doctumque fugat recitator acerbus ;
 quem vero arripuit, tenet occiditque legendo, 475
 non missura cutem, nisi plena cruoris, hirudo.

<sup>1</sup> si Kδ: sic aEM.

<sup>2</sup> demittere most mss.

<sup>3</sup> proiecerit, II.

<sup>4</sup> obiectas E.

---

<sup>a</sup> So Thales is said to have fallen into a well while studying the stars (Plato, Theaetetus, 174 A).

then if, like a fowler with his eyes upon blackbirds, he fall into a well <sup>a</sup> or pit, despite his far-reaching cry, "Help, O fellow-citizens!" not a soul will care to pull him out. And if one should care to lend aid and let down a rope, "How do you know," I'll say, "but that he threw himself in on purpose, and does not wish to be saved?" and I'll tell the tale of the Sicilian poet's end. Empedocles, eager to be thought a god immortal, coolly leapt into burning Aetna. Let poets have the right and power to destroy themselves. Who saves a man against his will does the same as murder him. Not for the first time has he done this, nor if he is pulled out will he at once become a human being and lay aside his craving for a notable death. Nor is it very clear how he comes to be a verse-monger. Has he defiled ancestral ashes or in sacrilege disturbed a hallowed plot <sup>b</sup>? At any rate he is mad, and, like a bear, if he has had strength to break the confining bars of his cage, he puts learned and unlearned alike to flight by the scourge of his recitals. If he catches a man, he holds him fast and reads him to death—a leech that will not let go the skin, till gorged with blood.

<sup>b</sup> The bidental was a spot struck by lightning, which was consecrated by a sacrifice of sheep (bidentes).

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

The references are to books and lines in the Latin text. Abbreviations: A.P. = Ars Poetica; E. = Epistles; S. = Satires or Sermones; also adj. = adjective; al. = alius; fem. = feminine; plur. = plural; sing. = singular; subst. = substantive.

ACADEMUS, an old Athenian hero.

In a garden dedicated to him and called Academia, Plato and his successors taught. E. ii. 2. 45

Accius, Roman tragic poet, born 170 B.C., S. i. 10. 53; E. ii. 1. 56; A.P. 258

Achilles, hero of the Iliad, S. i. 7. 12; ii. 8. 193; E. ii. 2. 42; A.P. 120. See Pelides

Achivi, the Greeks, S. ii. 8. 194; E. i. 2. 14; ii. 1. 33

Actius, adj., of Actium, promontory and town of Greece on the Ambracian Gulf, where Octavius defeated Antony in 31 B.C., E. i. 18. 61

Aegaeus, adj., Aegean, applied to the sea between Greece and Asia Minor, E. i. 11. 16

Aemilius, adj., of Aemilius (Lepidus), who, according to Porphyrio, set up a gladiatorial school, A.P. 32

Aeneas, the Trojan hero, son of Anchises and Venus, S. ii. 5. 63

Aeschylus, Greek tragic poet, E. ii. 1. 163; A.P. 279

Aesopus, Roman tragic actor, S. ii. 8. 239; E. ii. 1. 82

Aetna, the famous Mt. Etna in Sicily, A.P. 465

Aetolus, adj., of Aetolia, in central Greece, E. i. 18. 46

Afer, adj., African, S. ii. 4. 58; ii. 8. 95

Afranius, a writer of comedies with a Roman setting, known as togatæ, E. ii. 1. 57

Africa, i.e. Africa Provincia, the Roman province of Africa, S. ii. 3. 87

Agave, daughter of Cadmus, wife of Echion, king of Thebes, who in the madness of Bacchic rites tore her son Pentheus to pieces, S. ii. 3. 203

Agrippa, i.e. M. Vipsanius Agrippa, son-in-law of Augustus, aedile in 33 B.C., S. ii. 3. 185; erected the Portico of Neptune in 27 B.C., E. i. 6. 26; had estates in Sicily, E. i. 12. 1; conquered the Cantabri in 20-19 B.C., E. i. 12. 26

Ajax, Greek hero, son of Telamon, and brother of Teucer. In his tragedy, the Ajax, Sophocles represents Menelaus as forbidding Teucer to bury the dead hero. S. ii. 3. 187, 193, 201, 211

Albanus, adj., Alban, associated with the Alban hills, or the Alban Mount (now Monte Cavo) near Rome, S. ii. 4. 72; E. i. 7. 10; ii. 1. 27

Albinovanus, i.e. Celsus Albinovanus, E. i. 8. 1. See Celsus

Albinus, probably a usurer, A.P. 327

Albius, (1) a man of expensive tastes, S. i. 4. 28, 109; (2) the poet, Albius Tibullus, E. i. 4. 1, possibly son of (1)

Albucius, a name from Lucilius, S. ii. 1. 48; ii. 2. 67

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Alcaeus, Lesbian poet, E. i. 19. 29; ii. 2. 99
- Alcinous, king of Phaeacia and host of Ulysses, E. i. 2. 28
- Alcon, a Greek slave, S. ii. 8. 15
- Alexander, i.e. Alexander the Great, king of Macedon, E. ii. 1. 232, 241
- Alfenus, a barber, who is said to have become eminent in the law, S. i. 3. 130
- Allifanus, adj., of Allifae, a town of Samnium, known for its pottery, S. ii. 8. 39
- Alpes, the Alps, S. ii. 5. 41
- Alpinus, properly an adj., of the Alps, a nickname given to M. Furius Bibaculus, who wrote an Aethiopis and a poem on Gaul, S. i. 10. 36. See also Furius
- Amphion, son of Jupiter and Antiope, mother of Zethus, and famous player on the lyre. The citadel of Thebes was built to the accompaniment of his music. E. i. 18. 41, 44; A.P. 394. See Zethus
- Ancus, Ancus Marcius, fourth king of Rome, E. i. 6. 27
- Antenor, a Trojan chief, who proposed to restore Helen to the Greeks, E. i. 2. 9
- Anticyra, a town in Phocis on the Corinthian gulf, famous for its hellebore, S. ii. 3. 83, 166, A.P. 300
- Antiphates, king of the Laestrygonians (Homer, Od. x. 100 f.), A.P. 145
- Antonius, (1) Marcus Antonius, the triumvir, S. i. 5. 33; (2) Musa Antonius, a freedman and physician, who cured Augustus by cold-water treatment, E. i. 15. 3
- Anxur, the old name of Terracina, originally built at the top of a hill, but later rebuilt on the plain below, S. i. 5. 26
- Anytus, one of the accusers of Socrates, S. ii. 4. 3
- Apella, a Jewish freedman, S. i. 5. 100
- Apelles, a famous Greek painter, E. ii. 1. 239
- Apollo, the god, S. i. 9. 78; ii. 5. 60; E. i. 3. 17; i. 16. 59; ii. 1. 216; A.P. 407
- Appia (Via), Appian Way, S. i. 5. 6
- Appius, i.e. Appius Claudius Caecus, who in 312 B.C. built the Appian Way and Aqueduct, E. i. 6. 26; i. 18. 20. The Forum Appi, 43 miles south of Rome, was also named from him, S. i. 53. The Appius mentioned in S. i. 6. 21 is perhaps Appius Claudius Pulcher, who was censor in 50 B.C.
- Apulia, a district of Italy, S. i. 5. 77
- Apulus, adj., of Apulia, S. ii. 1. 34, 38
- Aquarius, the water-bearer, a sign of the Zodiac, S. i. 1. 36
- Aquilo, the north wind, or the North, S. ii. 6. 25; ii. 8. 56; A.P. 64
- Aquinas, adj., of Aquinum, a town of Latium, E. i. 10. 27
- Arabs, an Arab, E. i. 6. 6; i. 7. 36
- Arbuscula, an actress or mina, celebrated in Cicero's time (Ad Att. iv. 15), S. i. 10. 77
- Archiacus, adj., of Archias, a maker of furniture, E. i. 5. 1
- Archilochus, Greek iambic poet, flourished about 650 B.C., S. ii. 3. 12; E. i. 19. 25, 28; A.P. 79
- Arellius, a rich neighbour of Horace, S. ii. 6. 78
- Argi, city of Argos, in the Peloponnesus, often representative of Greece in general, S. ii. 8. 132; E. ii. 2. 128; A.P. 118
- Aricia, a town sixteen miles south of Rome, S. i. 5. 1
- Aricinus, adj., of Aricia, E. ii. 2. 167
- Aristarchus, a great Homeric critic, flourished at Alexandria about 180 B.C.; A.P. 450
- Aristippus, founder of the Cyrenaic school of philosophy, S. ii. 3. 100; E. i. 1. 18; i. 17. 14, 23
- Aristius Fuscus, a friend of Horace, S. i. 9. 61; i. 10. 88; E. i. 10. 1
- Aristophanes, the most famous of Attic writers of comedy, S. i. 4. 1
- Armenius, adj., Armenian, E. i. 12. 27
- Arrius, whose praenomen was Quintus, and who gave a great funeral

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- entertainment, mentioned by Cicero (In Vatinius, xii.), S. ii. 3. 86, 243
- Asia, the province of Asia, in Asia Minor, S. i. 7. 19, 24; E. i. 3. 5
- Asina, cognomen of Vinus, E. i. 13. 8
- Assyrius, adj., of Assyria, A.P. 118
- Atabulus, a hot, dry wind, peculiar to Apulia, the scirocco, S. i. 5. 78
- Atacinus. See Varro
- Athenae, Athens, S. i. 1. 64; ii. 7. 13; E. ii. 1. 213; ii. 2. 43, 81
- Atreus, son of Pelops, murdered the children of Thyestes, his brother, and served them as a meal to their father, A.P. 186
- Atrides, son of Atreus, Agamemnon, S. ii. 3. 187; E. i. 2. 12; Menelaus, E. i. 7. 43; plur. of both sons, S. ii. 3. 203
- Atta, i.e. T. Quintius Atta, a writer of togatae, who died in 78 B.C., E. ii. 1. 79
- Attalicus, adj., of Attalus, the name of several kings of Pergamos. The last of these left his enormous wealth to the Roman people in 133 B.C., E. i. 11. 5
- Atticus, adj., of Attica or Athens, S. ii. 8. 13
- Aufidius, perhaps M. Aufidius Turco, the first to fatten peacocks for sale, according to Pliny (N.H. x. 23. 20), S. ii. 4. 24
- Aufidius Luscus, the "praefectus" at Fundi, S. i. 5. 34
- Aufidus, a river of Apulia, now Ofanto, S. i. 1. 58
- Augustus, imperial title of Octavius Caesar, E. i. 3. 2, 7; i. 16. 29; ii. 2. 48. See Caesar
- Aulis, a town of Boeotia, whence the Greeks sailed for Troy, S. ii. 3. 199
- Aulus, son of Oppidius, S. ii. 3. 171. See Cascellius
- Auster, the south wind, S. i. 1. 6; ii. 2. 41; ii. 6. 18; ii. 8. 6; E. i. 11. 15
- Avidienus, a miser, S. ii. 2. 55
- BACCHIUS, a famous gladiator, S. i. 7. 20. See Bithus
- Bacchus, a god of wine and of poets, S. i. 3. 7 where some editors read Bacchae, i.e. votaries of Bacchus; E. ii. 2. 78
- Baiae, a town of Campania, a favourite seaside resort of the Romans, E. i. 1. 83; i. 15. 2, 12
- Baianus, adj., of Baiae, S. ii. 4. 82
- Baius, a certain poor man, S. i. 4. 110
- Balatro, a parasite of Maecenas, S. ii. 8. 21, 33, 40, 83 (cf. S. i. 2. 2)
- Balbinus, a person unknown, S. i. 3. 40
- Barbaria, a general term for all countries not Greek, E. i. 2. 7
- Barium, a town in Apulia, now Bari, S. i. 5. 97. To-day steamers go from Bari to ports in Albania, Montenegro, and Dalmatia
- Barrus, (1) a vain person, unknown, S. i. 6. 30; (2) a foul-mouthed person, S. i. 7. 8
- Bellona, sister of Mars, and goddess of war, S. ii. 3. 223
- Beneventum, a town of Samnium, now Benevento, S. i. 5. 71
- Bestius, probably a character in Lucilius, E. i. 15. 87
- Bibulus, probably C. Calpurnius Bibulus, a step-son of Brutus, S. i. 10. 86
- Bioneus, adj., of Bion, a philosopher, born in Scythia, who lived in Athens in the third century B.C., and was famous for his caustic wit, E. ii. 2. 60
- Birrius, a robber, S. i. 4. 69
- Bithus, a gladiator. He and Bacchius, after slaying many opponents, finally killed each other. S. i. 7. 20
- Bithynus, adj., of Bithynia, a Roman province in Asia Minor, south of the Euxine, E. i. 6. 33
- Boeotus, adj., of Boeotia, a district in Greece, north-west of Attica, E. ii. 1. 244
- Bolanus, a hot-headed acquaintance of Horace (the name was derived from Bola, a town of the Aequi), S. i. 9. 11
- Brundisium, now Brindisi, famous port of Calabria, S. i. 5. 104; E. i. 17. 52; i. 18. 20

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Brutus, i.e. M. Junius Brutus, who slew Caesar. He was properly praetor of Macedonia, but after the coalition of Octavian and M. Antonius, and the murder of C. Trebonius, proconsul of Asia, he assumed the jurisdiction of that province as well, S. i. 7. 18, 83
- Bullatius, a friend of Horace, E. i. 11. 1
- Butra, a friend of Torquatus, E. i. 5. 26
- Byzantium, adj., of Byzantium, centre of the tunny fishery of the Black Sea, S. ii. 4. 66
- CADMUS, (1) a public executioner, S. i. 6. 39; (2) founder of Thebes in Boeotia. He and his wife Harmonia were changed into serpents (so Ovid, Met. iv. 563 ff.), A.P. 187
- Caecilius, Roman comic poet, older contemporary of Terence, E. ii. 1. 59; A.P. 54
- Caelius, a robber, S. i. 4. 69
- Caeres, adj., belonging to Caere, an old town of Etruria, which had a limited Roman franchise. Whether this was given as a reward or was due to punishment imposed, is uncertain, E. i. 6. 62
- Caesar, a family name in the Julian gens; hence (1) C. Julius Caesar, the famous statesman and dictator, who left his gardens by his will to the Roman people, S. i. 9. 18; (2) C. Julius Caesar Octavianus, also called Augustus when emperor, grandnephew of the dictator, who adopted him as his son and heir, S. i. 3. 4; ii. 1. 11, 19, 84; E. i. 5. 9; i. 12. 28; i. 18. 18; ii. 1. 4; ii. 2. 48. See Augustus
- Calaber, adj., of Calabria, E. i. 7. 14; ii. 2. 177
- Callimachus, famous poet of Alexandria, flourished about 270 B.C., E. ii. 2. 100
- Calvus, i.e. C. Licinius Calvus, orator and poet, friend of Catullus, S. i. 10. 19
- Camena, pure Latin name of the Greek Μοῦσα, Muse, S. i. 10. 45; E. i. 1. 1; i. 18. 47; i. 19. 5; A.P. 275
- Camillus, i.e. M. Furius Camillus, who took Veii and freed Rome from the Gauls, 390 B.C., E. i. 1. 64
- Campanus, adj., of Campania, S. i. 5. 45, 62; i. 6. 118; ii. 3. 144; ii. 8. 56
- Campus, the Campus Martius or Field of Mars, in Rome, S. i. 1. 90; i. 6. 126; ii. 6. 49; E. i. 7. 59; i. 18. 54
- Canidia, a sorceress, S. i. 8. 24, 48; ii. 1. 48; ii. 8. 95
- Canis, (1) the Dog-star, E. i. 10. 16; (2) a nickname, S. ii. 2. 56
- Cantaber, adj., of Cantabria, in Spain, E. i. 12. 26
- Cantabricus, adj., of Cantabria, E. i. 18. 55
- Canusinus, adj., of Canusium, S. i. 10. 30
- Canusium, a place in Apulia, where they spoke both Greek and Latin, S. i. 5. 91; ii. 3. 168
- Capito. See Fonteius
- Capitolinus. See Petillius
- Cappadox, a Cappadocian, living in Cappadocia, the most eastern Asiatic province of the Romans, E. i. 6. 89
- Caprius, a public prosecutor, S. i. 4. 66
- Capua, a town in Campania, S. i. 5. 47; E. i. 11. 11
- Cascellius, with praenomen Aulus, an eminent jurist, contemporary of Cicero, but living into the time of Augustus, A.P. 371
- Cassius, (1) Etruscus, a poet, perhaps same as (2), S. i. 10. 62; (2) Parmensis, an elegiac poet, one of the slayers of Caesar, E. i. 4. 3
- Castor, (1) brother of Pollux and Helen, S. ii. 1. 26; E. ii. 1. 5; (2) a gladiator, E. i. 18. 19
- Catia, a shameless woman, S. i. 2. 95
- Catienus, an actor, S. ii. 8. 61
- Catius, according to the scholiasts either an Epicurean philosopher, or a writer on the art of baking, S. ii. 4. 1, 88
- Cato, (1) the famous censor, M. Porcius Cato, S. i. 2. 82; E.

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- ii. 2. 117; A.P. 56; (2) another M. Porcius Cato, called Uticensis, because he killed himself at Utica, E. i. 19. 13, 14; (3) Valerius Cato, a grammarian of the late Republic, S. i. 10. 1* (interpolated)
- Catullus, the famous Roman poet, 87-54 B.C., S. i. 10. 19
- Caudium, a Samnite town at the head of the famous Caudine Forks, S. i. 5. 51
- Celsus Albinovanus, a friend of Horace, one of the staff of Tiberius and his secretary, E. i. 8. 15; i. 8. 1, 17
- Ceres, goddess of agriculture, S. ii. 2. 124; ii. 8. 14
- Cerinthus, a profligate, S. i. 2. 81
- Cervius, (1) an informer, S. ii. 1. 47; (2) one of Horace's country neighbours, S. ii. 6. 77
- Cethegus, an orator of the old Republic, consul in 204 B.C., E. ii. 2. 117; A.P. 50
- Charybdis, a whirlpool in the straits of Messina (see Homer, Od. xii. 81 ff.), A.P. 145
- Chios, an island in the Aegean, E. i. 11. 1, 21
- Choerilus, a poet of Iasos in Caria, who followed in the train of Alexander the Great and composed epic verse upon his victories, E. ii. 1. 233; A.P. 357
- Chremes, an old man figuring in the Andria and Heauton of Terence, and typical of his form of comedy, S. i. 10. 40; A.P. 94
- Chrysippus, a Stoic philosopher, born at Soli in Cilicia in 280 B.C., S. i. 3. 127; ii. 3. 44, 287; E. i. 2. 4
- Cibyriticus, adj., of Cibyra, a town in southern Phrygia, centre of a conventus of twenty-five towns, E. i. 6. 38
- Cicirrhus Messius, an Oscan ("Cicirrhus" is a nickname, meaning "a cock"), S. i. 5. 52, 65
- Cicuta, a moneylender (the name is probably a nickname, i.e. "hemlock-poison"), S. ii. 3. 69, 175. See Perellius
- Cinara, a girl who figures in Horace's lyric poetry, E. i. 7. 28; i. 14. 33
- Circe, a famous enchantress in Homer's Odyssey (x. 230 ff.), E. i. 2. 23
- Circeii, a promontory in Latium, S. ii. 4. 33
- Claudius, i.e. Tiberius Claudius Nero, son of Livia, and later emperor, E. i. 8. 2; i. 12. 26
- Clazomenae, a town in Asia Minor, on the bay of Smyrna, S. i. 7. 5
- Clusinus, adj., of Clusium, in Etruria, E. i. 15. 9
- Cocceius, i.e. M. Cocceius Nerva, consul 36 B.C., great-grandfather of the emperor Nerva, S. i. 5. 28, 50
- Colchus, an inhabitant of Colchis on the Black Sea, A.P. 118
- Colophon, a city of Ionia, on the coast of Lydia, E. i. 11. 3
- Copia, Abundance (a personification), E. i. 12. 29
- Coranus, a quinquevir who became a scriba, S. ii. 5. 57, 64
- Corinthus, a city on the Isthmus of Corinth, E. i. 17. 36; ii. 1. 193
- Corvinus, S. i. 10. 29. See Messalla
- Corycius, adj., of Corycus in Cilicia, S. ii. 4. 68
- Cous, adj., of Cos, an island near Halicarnassus in Caria, S. i. 2. 101; ii. 8. 9
- Crantor, an Academic philosopher and a voluminous writer, E. i. 2. 4
- Craterus, a physician named in Cicero's letters (Ad Att. xii. 18. 1; xii. 14. 4), S. ii. 8. 161
- Cratinus, a poet of the Old Attic Comedy, S. i. 4. 1; E. i. 19. 1
- Crispinus, a Stoic writer, despised by Horace, S. i. 1. 120; i. 3. 139; i. 4. 14; ii. 7. 45
- Croesus, a wealthy king of Lydia, E. i. 11. 2
- Cumae, a town in Campania, E. i. 15. 11
- Cupiennius, i.e. C. Cupiennius Libo of Cumae, a favourite of Augustus, S. i. 2. 36
- Curius, i.e. M. Curius Dentatus, consul 290 B.C., conqueror of the

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Samnites, Senones, and Pyrrhus, E. i. 1. 64
- Curtillus, unknown except from S. ii. 8. 52
- Cyclops, one of the Cyclopes, a one-eyed race of giants, especially the Cyclops Polyphemus, S. i. 5. 63; E. ii. 2. 125; A.P. 145
- Cynicus, a Cynic philosopher, E. i. 17. 18
- Dacus, adj., Dacian, of the Daci, a people on the north bank of the Danube, S. ii. 6. 53
- Dama, a slave-name, S. i. 6. 38; ii. 5. 18, 101; ii. 7. 54
- Damasippus, i.e. Junius Damasippus, a man who figures in Cicero's Letters as an agent in the purchase of works of art and other kinds of property (Ad Att. xii. 29. 33; Ad fam. vii. 23). Horace represents him as a convert to Stoicism, S. ii. 3. 16, 64, 65, 324
- Davus, (1) a slave character in Comedy, S. i. 10. 40; ii. 5. 91; A.P. 237; (2) a slave of Horace, S. ii. 7. 2, 46, 100
- December, the tenth month of the Roman year, when the Saturnalia were celebrated, S. ii. 7. 4; E. i. 20. 27
- Decius, i.e. P. Decius Mus, who devoted himself to death in the Latin War, was the first consul of his family, the Decian gens being plebeian, S. i. 6. 20
- Delphi, seat of the oracle of Apollo, A.P. 219
- Demetrius, (1) a trainer of actresses (mimæ), S. i. 10. 79, 90, and probably the simius of l. 18; (2) a Greek slave, E. i. 7. 52
- Democritus, the Eleatic laughing philosopher of Abdera in Thrace, E. i. 12. 12; ii. 1. 194; A.P. 297
- Diana, sister to Apollo, and goddess of the Moon, A.P. 16, 454
- Digentia, a small river in the Sabine country, now the Licenza, E. i. 18. 104
- Diomedes, or Diomedes, son of Tydeus, who was famous as a Greek hero at Troy and later was said to have founded Canusium and other towns in Apulia, S. i. 5. 92; i. 7. 16; A.P. 146
- Dionysius, a slave-name, S. i. 6. 38
- Dolichos (al. Docilis), a gladiator, E. i. 18. 19
- EGERIA, a nymph of Latium who became wife of Numa, S. i. 2. 126
- Empedocles, a philosopher, born at Agrigentum in Sicily, who wrote a poem on Nature, E. i. 12. 20; A.P. 465
- Ennius, a famous Roman epic poet, born at Rudiae, in Calabria, 240 B.C., author of the Annales, S. i. 10. 54; E. i. 19. 7; ii. 1. 50; A.P. 56, 259
- Epicharmus, writer of Doric comedy, born at Cos, but lived most of his life in Sicily, E. ii. 1. 58
- Epicurus, founder of the Epicurean school of philosophy, E. i. 4. 16
- Epidaurius, adj., of Epidaurus, a city of Argolis in Greece, dedicated to Aesculapius, whose symbol was a serpent, S. i. 3. 27
- Etruscus, adj., Etruscan, S. i. 6. 1; i. 10. 61
- Eupolis, a poet of the Old Attic Comedy, S. i. 4. 1; ii. 3. 12
- Eutrapelus, i.e. P. Volumnius Eutrapelus, a knight, and friend of Antonius, to whom are addressed two of Cicero's letters (Ad fam. vii. 32. 33), E. i. 18. 31
- Evander, the king of Pallanteum, who welcomed Aeneas to his home on the Palatine Hill, S. i. 3. 91
- FABIA, adj. (sc. tribus), the Fabian tribe, of Roman citizens, E. i. 6. 52
- Fabius, a Roman eques, who wrote on Stoic philosophy, S. i. 1. 14; i. 2. 134
- Fabricius, adj., of Fabricius, who in 62 B.C. built the bridge connecting the Insula Tiberina with the left bank of the Tiber, S. ii. 3. 36
- Fannius, a vain poet, S. i. 4. 21; i. 10. 80

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Fauni, gods of the forests, identified with the Greek satyrs, the followers of Bacchus, E. i. 19. 4; A.P. 244
- Fausta, daughter of the dictator Sulla, S. i. 2. 64
- Ferentinum, a quiet hamlet in the Alban district, where the members of the Latin league once assembled, E. i. 17. 8
- Feronia, an Italian goddess, perhaps Etruscan, who had a shrine near Tarracina, S. i. 5. 24
- Fescenninus, adj., Fescennine, of doubtful origin. The Fescennina carmina were coarse verses sung at rustic festivals and at weddings, E. ii. 1. 145
- Fidenae, a town on the Via Salaria, five miles from Rome, E. i. 11. 8
- Flaccus, S. ii. 1. 18. See Horatius
- Flavius, a schoolmaster at Venusia, S. i. 6. 72
- Florus, i.e. Julius Florus, a friend of Horace and of Tiberius, a student of oratory and a writer of satires, i. 3. 1; ii. 2. 1
- Fonteius Capito, consul suffectus in 30 B.C., S. i. 5. 32, 38
- Fortuna, Fortune (personification), S. ii. 2. 126; ii. 6. 49; ii. 8. 61; E. i. 1. 68
- Forum Appi. See Appius
- Fufidius, a money-lender of Arpinum, with whom Cicero had dealings, S. i. 2. 12
- Fufius, an actor, S. ii. 3. 60
- Fulvius, a gladiator, S. ii. 7. 96
- Fundanius, a writer of comedies, S. i. 10. 42; ii. 8. 19
- Fundi, a town in Latium on the Appian Way, now Fondi, S. i. 5. 34
- Furiae, goddesses of vengeance, S. i. 8. 45; ii. 3. 135: the singular Furia, S. ii. 3. 141
- Furius, i.e. M. Furius Bibaculus, a poet of Cremona, whom Quintilian classes with Catullus and Horace as a writer of iambics (x. i. 96). See also Alpinus, S. ii. 5. 41
- Furnius, consul 17 B.C., a friend of Horace, S. i. 10. 86
- Fuscus. See Aristius
- GABII, an old town of Latium, between Rome and Praeneste, E. i. 11. 7; i. 15. 9; ii. 1. 25; ii. 2. 3
- Gaetulus, adj., Gaetulian, African, the Gaetuli being a people of north-west Africa, E. ii. 2. 181
- Galba, a jurisconsult, but a man of low morals, S. i. 2. 46
- Galli, (1) priests of Cybele, S. i. 2. 121; (2) the Gauls, S. ii. 1. 14
- Gallina, a gladiator, S. ii. 6. 44. See Thrax
- Gallonius, an epicure figuring in Lucilius, S. ii. 2. 47
- Garganus, a mountain in Apulia, now Monte di S. Angelo, E. ii. 1. 202
- Gargilius, a man who wanted to be known as a huntsman, E. i. 6. 58
- Gargonius, an unsavoury person, S. i. 2. 27; i. 4. 92
- Genius, guardian spirit, E. i. 7. 94; ii. 1. 144; ii. 2. 187; A.P. 210
- Glaucus, the Lycian hero who, instead of fighting with Diomedes, exchanged his golden armour for the other's brazen (Homer, Iliad vi.), S. i. 7. 17
- Glycon, a famous athlete, E. i. 1. 30
- Gnatia, or Egnatia, a town of Apulia, on the Adriatic coast, S. i. 5. 97
- Gracchus, an eloquent orator, like the famous brothers Gaius and Tiberius Gracchus, the reformers, E. ii. 2. 89
- Graecia, Greece, E. i. 2. 7; ii. 1. 93, 156
- Graecus, adj., Greek, S. i. 5. 3; i. 7. 32; i. 10. 20, 31, 35, 66; ii. 3. 100; E. ii. 1. 90, 161; ii. 2. 7; A.P. 53, 268, 286
- Graius, adj., Greek, E. ii. 1. 19, 28; ii. 2. 42; A.P. 323
- Grosphus, a Roman knight, living in Sicily, where he owned a large estate, E. i. 12. 22
- HADRIA, the Adriatic, E. i. 18. 63
- Hagne, a woman loved by Balbinus, S. i. 3. 40
- Harpyia, a Harpy, a monster with

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- a human head, but the body of a bird, S. ii. 2. 40
- Hebrus, a river of Thrace, now Maritza, E. i. 8. 3; i. 16. 13
- Hecate, a goddess of the lower world, and sister of Latona, identified with Diana on earth and Luna in heaven, and therefore represented with three heads, S. i. 8. 33
- Hector, eldest son of Priam, chief hero of Troy, slain by Achilles, S. i. 7. 12
- Helena, wife of Menelaus, carried off by Paris to Troy, S. i. 3. 107
- Helicon, famous mountain in Boeotia, abode of the Muses, E. ii. 1. 118; A.P. 296
- Heliodorus, a rhetorician, known only from S. i. 5. 2. See p. 63
- Hellas, a girl murdered by her lover Marius, S. ii. 3. 277
- Hercules, son of Jupiter and Alcmena, renowned for his "Labours," E. i. 1. 5; sometimes, like Mercury, regarded as a god of gain, S. ii. 6. 13
- Hermogenes Tigellius, a singer and poet despised by Horace, S. i. 3. 129; i. 4. 72; i. 9. 25; i. 10. 18, 80, 90. See Tigellius and p. 54, note <sup>b</sup>
- Herodes, i.e. Herod the Great, who derived a large revenue from the palm-groves of Judaea, especially about Jericho, E. ii. 2. 184
- Hiberus, adj., Iberian, Spanish, The piscis Hiberus was the scomber or mackerel, S. ii. 8. 46
- Homerus, the Greek epic poet; S. i. 10. 52; E. i. 19. 6; ii. 1. 50; A.P. 74, 359, 401 (cf. E. i. 2. 1)
- Horatius, i.e. Quintus Horatius Flaccus, the poet, E. i. 14. 5. See Flaccus and Quintus
- Hydaspes, an Indian slave, named from the river Hydaspes, now Djelun, S. ii. 8. 14
- Hydra, a seven-headed snake, killed by Hercules, E. ii. 1. 10
- Hymettius, adj., of Hymettus, a mountain of Attica, S. ii. 2. 15
- Hypsaea, a blind woman, who is said to have also had the name Plotia or Plautia, S. i. 2. 91
- IANUS, a two-faced Italian deity, god of beginnings, entrances, and undertakings, whose temple, said to have been built originally by Numa, stood in the Argiletum, north of the Roman Forum. It was opened on the declaration of war, but kept closed in time of peace. S. ii. 6. 20; E. i. 16. 59; i. 20. 1; ii. 1. 255. Certain arches in the Forum itself also went by the name of Ianus, and were the centre of the banking business of Rome, S. ii. 3. 18; E. i. 1. 54
- Iarbita, a Moor, E. i. 19. 15
- Iccius, a friend of Horace, procurator of Agrippa's estates in Sicily, E. i. 12. 1 (cf. Odes i. 29)
- Idus, the Ides, the middle of the Roman month, the fifteenth day in March, May, July, October; the thirteenth in the other months, S. i. 6. 75
- Ilerda, a town in Spain, now Lerida, E. i. 20. 18
- Ilia, mother of Romulus and Remus, S. i. 2. 126
- Iliacus, adj., of Ilium, Trojan; E. i. 2. 16; A.P. 129
- Iliona or Ilione, eldest daughter of Priam, wife of Polymnestor, king of Thrace, whose son Deiphilus was killed by his father. This furnished the subject of the tragedy Ilione by Pacuvius. S. ii. 8. 61
- Indi, inhabitants of India, E. i. 1. 45; i. 6. 6
- Ino, daughter of Cadmus and wife of Athamas, who, after her husband went mad and tore one of her children to pieces, was changed into a sea-goddess, A.P. 123
- Io, daughter of Inachus, loved by Jupiter and changed by Juno into a heifer, A.P. 124
- Italia, Italy, S. i. 6. 35; E. i. 12. 29
- Italus, adj., Italian, S. i. 7. 82; ii. 6. 56; E. i. 18. 57; ii. 1. 2
- Ithaca, Ithaca, an island off the west coast of Greece, S. ii. 5. 4; E. i. 7. 41

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

Ithacensis, adj., of Ithaca, E. i. 6. 63

Iudaeus, adj., of Judaea, used as a noun, a Jew; pl. the Jews, S. i. 4. 143; i. 5. 100; i. 9. 70

Iulius, possibly a freedman of Julius Caesar, S. i. 8. 39

Iulius Florus. See Florus

Iuno, daughter of Saturn and wife of Jupiter, S. i. 3. 11

Iuppiter, son of Saturn and king of the gods, S. i. 1. 20; i. 2. 18; ii. 1. 43; ii. 3. 288; E. i. 1. 106; i. 12. 3; i. 16. 29; i. 17. 34; i. 18. 111; i. 19. 43; ii. 1. 16, 68. See Diespiter

Ixion, king of the Lapithae and father of Pirithous. Called perfidus, because, after being kindly treated by Jupiter, he tried to dishonour Juno, A.P. 124

KALENDAE, first day of the month, one of the regular days for the settling of debts, S. i. 3. 87

Karthago, Carthage, S. ii. 1. 66

LABEO, i.e. according to the scholiasts, M. Antistius Labeo, a juriconsult, S. i. 3. 82

Laberius, a Roman knight, who composed mimes in the time of Julius Caesar, S. i. 10. 6

Laelius, i.e. C. Laelius Sapiens, a friend of Scipio and Terence, S. ii. 1. 65, 72

Laertiades, the son of Laertes, i.e. Ulysses, S. ii. 5. 59. See Ulixes

Laevinus, i.e. P. Valerius Laevinus, a man of high birth but poor character, S. i. 6. 12, 19

Lamia, (1) a witch who preyed on children, a vampire, A.P. 340; (2) L. Aelius Lamia, a friend of Horace, E. i. 14. 6 (see Odes iii. 17. 1 ff.)

Lares (also sing. Lar), tutelar deities of the hearth, S. i. 5. 66; ii. 3. 165; ii. 5. 14; ii. 6. 66

Latinae (sc. feriae), the Latin games, the days for which were appointed annually by the consuls, E. i. 7. 76

Latinus, (1) Latinus, king of Latium, whose daughter Lavinia became the wife of Aeneas, S. i. 10. 27 (reading Latini); (2) adj., Latin, S. i. 10. 20; E. i. 3. 12; i. 19. 32; ii. 2. 143; adv. Latine, S. i. 10. 27

Latium, the plain between the lower Tiber and Campania, E. i. 19. 24; ii. 1. 157; ii. 2. 121; A.P. 290

Laurens, adj., of Laurentum, capital of Latium, S. ii. 4. 42

Laverna, goddess of thieves, E. i. 16. 60

Lebedus, a town of Ionia, near Colophon, in Asia Minor, destroyed by Lysimachus after the battle of Ipsus (301 B.C.), E. i. 11. 6, 7

Leo, constellation of the Lion, E. i. 10. 16

Lepidus, i.e. Q. Aemilius Lepidus, one of the consuls of 21 B.C., E. i. 20. 28

Lepos, a famous mime actor, S. ii. 6. 72

Lesbos, the island of Lesbos, in the Aegaeon, famous for its beauty, its climate, its wine, its art, and its literature, E. i. 11. 1

Liber, the same as Bacchus, S. i. 4. 89; E. i. 19. 4; ii. 1. 5

Libitina, goddess of death, S. ii. 6. 19; E. ii. 1. 49

Libo, as in puteal Libonis, "Libo's well," a well-head in the Forum, near the Arch of Fabius, where a tribunal was first set up by one Libo, E. i. 19. 8; cf. S. ii. 6. 35

Libya, the northern part of Africa, S. ii. 3. 101

Libycus, adj., of Libya, E. i. 10. 19

Licinus, a barber, A.P. 301

Livius (Andronicus), who first brought out a play in Rome in 240 B.C., and translated the Odyssey into Saturnian verse, E. ii. 1. 62, 69

Lollius, (1) i.e. M. Lollius, consul in 21 B.C., E. i. 20. 28; (2) Lollius Maximus, probably a relative of the former, who served under Augustus in the Cantabrian campaign, 25 B.C., E. i. 2. 1; i. 18. 1

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Longarenus, unknown except from
S. i. 2. 67
- Lucania, a district of lower Italy,
S. ii. 1. 38
- Lucanus, adj., of Lucania, S. ii. 1.
34; ii. 3. 234; ii. 8. 6; E. i. 15. 21;
ii. 2. 178
- Lucilius, i.e. C. Lucilius, friend of Scipio, writer of satires, who lived about 180 to 103 B.C., S. i.
4. 6, 57; i. 10. 1* (interpolated lines); i. 10. 2, 53, 56, 64; ii. 1.
17, 29, 62, 75
- Lucrinus, adj., of the Lucrine lake,
in Campania, S. ii. 4. 32
- Lucullus, i.e. L. Licinius Lucullus, general against Mithridates, extremely wealthy, E. i. 6. 40; ii.
2. 26
- Lupus, i.e. L. Cornelius Lentulus Lupus, consul 156 B.C., who was assailed by Lucilius, S. ii. 1. 68
- Lycambes, the father of Neobule, who betrothed her to Archilochus, but later broke his word. The poet's invectives caused Lycambes to hang himself. E. i. 19. 25. See Epode vi. 13
- Lydi, the Lydians, by whom Etruria
is said to have been settled, S.
i. 6. 1
- Lymphae, nymphs of the springs,
S. i. 5. 97
- Lynceus, one of the Argonauts, son
of Aphareus and brother of Ida, possessed of very keen sight, S.
i. 2. 90; E. i. 1. 28
- Lysippus, a famous Greek sculptor
of the fourth century B.C., E.
ii. 1. 240
- MÆCENAS, a Roman knight, friend of Augustus, and patron of Horace, S. i. 1. 1; i. 8. 64; i. 5.
27, 31, 48; i. 6. 1; i. 9. 48; i. 10.
81; ii. 3. 312; ii. 6. 31, 38, 41; ii.
7. 33; ii. 8. 16, 22; E. i. 1. 3; i.
7. 5; i. 19. 1
- Maecius, i.e. Spurius Maecius Tarpæ,
a critic of the drama known to Cicero (Ad fam. vii. 1), A.P. 387
- Maenius, a spendthrift, who figured in Lucilius, S. i. 3. 21; E. i. 15.
26
- Maia, mother of Mercury, and daughter of Atlas, S. ii. 6. 5
- Maltinus (al. Malchinus), an effemin-ate person, S. i. 2. 25. See p. 17
- Mamurra, a Roman knight of Formiae, a favourite of Caesar's, who amassed great wealth, S. i.
5. 37
- Manes, the spirits of the departed,
the gods below, S. i. 8. 29; E.
ii. 1. 138
- Marius, a man who murdered his mistress and then committed suicide, S. ii. 3. 277
- Marsaenus, lover of Origo, S. i. 2. 55
- Marsya, Marsyas, a satyr, who challenged Apollo to a musical contest and, being defeated, was flayed alive. A statue of Marsyas stood in the Forum near the Rostra. Either the expression of pain or the uplifted arm is referred to in S. i. 6. 120 f.
- Martius, adj., of Mars, the god of war, A.P. 402
- Matutinus, adj., belonging to the morning, or used as a noun, god of the morning, a term applied to Janus, S. ii. 6. 20
- Maximus, E. i. 2. 1. See Lollius
- Medea, the sorceress, daughter of Aetes in Colchis, whence she fled with Jason the Argonaut, who afterwards deserted her.
She then slew their common children. This is the subject of the Medea of Euripides. A.P.
123, 185
- Meleager, son of Oeneus and Althaea, was the half-brother of Tydeus (son of Periboea), father of Diomedes. He was cursed by his mother for the death of his two brothers, and her Erinnys pursued him to his death. A.P.
146
- Memnon, son of Tithonus and Aurora and king of the Ethiopians. His death at the hands of Achilles was the subject of the Aethiopis of Arctinus, a cyclic poet. S. i. 10. 36
- Mena, or Menas, a name contracted from the Greek Menodorus. He

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- was a freedman, and took the Roman gentile name Volteius from his patron. E. i. 7. 55, 61. See Volteius
- Menander, famous writer of the New Attic Comedy, lived from 342 to 290 B.C., S. ii. 3. 11; E. ii. 1. 57
- Menelaus, son of Atreus, brother of Agamemnon, and husband of Helen, S. ii. 3. 198. See Atrides
- Menenius, a madman, S. ii. 3. 287
- Mercurialis, adj., of Mercury, the god of gain, S. ii. 3. 25
- Mercurius, Mercury, son of Jupiter and Maia, and messenger of the gods, god of gain and good luck, S. ii. 3. 68 (cf. ii. 6. 5)
- Messalla, a name associated with the aristocratic Valerian gens. M. Valerius Messalla Corvinus, orator and historian, was consul in 31 B.C., and triumphed over the Aquitani in 27 B.C. He had a brother, L. Gellius Publicola, who was consul in 36 B.C. S. i. 6. 42; i. 10. 85; A.P. 371
- Messius, S. i. 5. 52, 54. See Cicirrhus
- Metella, perhaps Caecilia Metella, divorced wife of P. Cornelius Lentulus Spinther, S. ii. 3. 239
- Metellus, i.e. Q. Caecilius Metellus Macedonicus, consul 143 B.C., political opponent of Scipio, S. ii. 1. 67
- Methymnaeus, adj., of Methymna, a town in Lesbos, S. ii. 8. 50
- Miletus, a city of Ionia in Asia Minor, E. i. 17. 30
- Milonius, according to Porphyrio, a scurra or parasite, S. ii. 1. 24
- Mimnermus, an elegiac poet of Colophon, of the sixth century B.C., E. i. 6. 65; ii. 2. 101
- Minerva, goddess of wisdom, patroness of arts and science, S. ii. 2. 3; A.P. 385
- Minturnae, a town on the borders of Latium and Campania, at the mouth of the Liris, E. i. 5. 5
- Minucius, who gave his name to the Via Minucia, which ran from Brundisium to Beneventum, E. i. 18. 20
- Misenum, a promontory of Campania, north of the bay of Naples, S. ii. 4. 33
- Mitylene, capital of Lesbos, E. i. 11. 17
- Molossus, adj., of the Molossians, who lived in Eastern Epirus, S. ii. 6. 114
- Moschus, a rhetorician from Pergamum, who was tried for poisoning, E. i. 5. 9
- Mucius, a famous lawyer, probably P. Mucius Scaevola, consul in 133 B.C., or his son Q. Mucius Scaevola, consul in 95 B.C., E. ii. 2. 89
- Mulvius, a parasite, S. ii. 7. 86
- Munatius, son of L. Munatius Plancus, the consul of 42 B.C. (see Odes i. 7. 19; iii. 14. 28); E. i. 3. 31
- Murena, i.e. L. Licinius Murena, brother-in-law of Maecenas, S. i. 5. 38
- Musa, (1) a Muse, S. i. 5. 53; ii. 3. 105; ii. 6. 17; E. i. 3. 13; i. 8. 2; i. 19. 28; ii. 1. 27, 133, 243; ii. 2. 92; A.P. 83, 141, 324, 407; (2) Musa Antonius. See Antonius
- Mutus, unknown elsewhere, E. i. 6. 22
- NAEVIUS, (1) a spendthrift, S. i. 1. 101; S. ii. 2. 68 (perhaps not the same); (2) a poet from Campania of the third century B.C. (he wrote dramas and also an epic, the Bellum Punicum, this last in Saturnian verse), E. ii. 1. 53
- Nasica, a man who, being in debt to Coranus, gave him his daughter in marriage, S. ii. 5. 57, 65, 67
- Nasidienus, Rufus (probably a fictitious name), a wealthy upstart, S. ii. 8. 1, 58, 75, 84
- Natta, a stingy person, S. i. 6. 124
- Neptunus, Neptune, god of the sea, E. i. 11. 10; A.P. 64
- Nero, i.e. Tiberius Claudius Nero, E. i. 8. 2; i. 9. 4; i. 12. 26; ii. 2. 1. See Claudius
- Nestor, son of Neleus, king of Pylus, oldest of the Greeks before Troy, E. i. 2. 11

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

Nomentanus, (1) a spendthrift, who figures in Lucilius, S. i. 1. 102; i. 8. 11; ii. 1. 22; ii. 3. 175, 224; (2) a parasite, S. ii. 8. 23, 25, 60
 Novius, a money-lender, one of two brothers, S. i. 3. 21; i. 6. 40; i. 6. 121
 Numa, i.e. Numa Pompilius, second king of Rome, E. i. 6. 27; ii. 1. 86
 Numicius, unknown, E. i. 6. 1

 OCTAVIUS, a poet and historian, friend of Horace, S. i. 10. 82
 Ofellus, a country neighbour of Horace's, S. ii. 2. 2, 53, 112, 133
 Olympia, the Olympic games, celebrated every four years at Olympia, in Elis, E. i. 1. 50
 Opimius, a miser, S. ii. 3. 142
 Oppidius, i.e. Servius Oppidius, a man of Canusium who had two sons, Aulus and Tiberius, S. ii. 3. 163, 171, 173
 Orbilius, a native of Beneventum, who set up a school there, and later in Rome, E. ii. 1. 71
 Orbius, a rich landowner, E. ii. 2. 160
 Oreus, a god of the lower world, Death, S. ii. 5. 49; E. ii. 2. 178
 Orestes, son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. He killed his mother and was driven mad by the Furies. S. ii. 3. 133, 137; A.P. 124
 Origo, a mima, or actress, S. i. 2. 55
 Orpheus, a mythical bard of Thrace, whose song charmed wild beasts, A.P. 392
 Oscus, adj., Oscan, of the Oscans, a primitive people of Italy, S. i. 5. 54
 Osiris, an Egyptian deity, husband of Isis, E. i. 17. 60

 PACIDRIANUS, a gladiator, "the best that ever lived," according to Lucilius, S. ii. 7. 97
 Pacuvius, a famous writer of tragedies, nephew of Ennius, E. ii. 1. 56. See Ilione

Palatinus, adj., of the Palatine, where Augustus in 28 B.C. dedicated a temple to Apollo, with a public library, E. i. 3. 17
 Pautilius, unknown, S. i. 10. 78
 Pantolabus, a parasite. The name is probably coined for satire ( $\pi\alpha\nu + \lambda\alpha\beta\epsilon\iota\nu$ , "all-receiver"), S. i. 8. 11; ii. 1. 22
 Paris, son of Priam and Hecuba, who carried off Helen, wife of Menelaus, and so led to the Trojan war, E. i. 2. 6, 10
 Parius, adj., of Paros, an island of the Cyclades in the Aegæan, famous for its marble and as the birthplace of Archilochus, E. i. 10. 23
 Parmensis. See Cassius
 Parthus, a Parthian. The Parthians lived north-east of the Caspian Sea, S. ii. 1. 15; ii. 5. 62; E. i. 18. 56; ii. 1. 112, 256
 Paulus, a cognomen of the Aemilian gens, to which belonged L. Aemilius Paulus, consul in 216 B.C.; his son, the conqueror of Perseus, and the younger Scipio Africanus, the latter's son, S. i. 6. 41
 Pausiacus, adj., of Pausias, a Greek painter from Sicyon, contemporary of Apelles in the fourth century B.C., S. ii. 7. 95
 Pedanus, adj., of Pedum, a town between Tibur and Praeneste, E. i. 4. 2
 Pediatia, a feminine name given in contempt to one Pediatius, a Roman knight who had lost both fortune and repute, S. i. 8. 39
 Pedius, an orator, probably the son of Q. Pedius, who was consul in 43 B.C., S. i. 10. 28
 Peleus (the subject of a tragedy by Sophocles), son of Aeacus, was driven from Aegina for the murder of his half-brother Phocus, A.P. 96, 104
 Pelides, son of Peleus, Achilles, E. i. 2. 12. See Achilles
 Penates, the Penates, household gods, S. ii. 8. 176; E. i. 7. 94
 Penelope, the faithful wife of

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Ulysses, S. ii. 5. 76, 81; E. i. 2. 28
- Pentheus, king of Thebes, torn in pieces by his mother Agave because he had mocked at the rites of Bacchus, E. i. 16. 73. See Agave
- Perellius, a banker, perhaps the same as Cicuta, S. ii. 3. 75
- Persius, a wealthy man of Clazomenae, born of a Greek father and a Roman mother, S. i. 7. 2, 4, 19, 33
- Petillius Capitolinus, said to have been accused of stealing the gold crown from the statue of Jupiter on the Capitol, and to have been acquitted by Caesar. The story is an exaggeration, because the name Capitolinus, which is said to have been given Petillius because of the charge, was a cognomen of the Petillia gens, and the crime of stealing the crown of Jupiter is proverbial in the plays of Plautus. S. i. 4. 94; i. 10. 26
- Petrinus, a town in the Falernian district, E. i. 5. 5
- Phaeax, a Phaeacian. The Phaeacians were mythic inhabitants of Corcyra, subjects of Alcinous, and living in luxury, E. i. 15. 24
- Philippi, a town of Macedonia, now Filibi, where Brutus and Cassius were defeated by Octavius and Antony, 42 B.C., E. ii. 2. 49
- Philippus, (1) L. Marcius Philippus, consul 91 B.C., a distinguished lawyer, E. i. 7. 46, 52, 64, 66, 78, 89, 90; (2) a gold coin, the Macedonian stater, bearing the head of Philip the Great, worth rather more than one guinea, or five dollars, E. ii. 1. 234
- Philodemus, of Gadara, poet and Epicurean philosopher, who lived at Rome in the time of Cicero, S. i. 2. 121
- Phraates, king of the Parthians, who in 20-19 B.C. restored to the Romans the standards taken from Crassus at Charrae, E. i. 12. 27
- Picenus, adj., of Picenum, a district of Italy on the Adriatic, S. ii. 3. 272; ii. 4. 70
- Pierius, adj., Pierian, Thessalian, from Pieria in Thessaly, haunted by the Muses, A.P. 405
- Pindaricus, adj., of Pindar, from Thebes in Boeotia, greatest of the Greek lyric poets, E. i. 3. 10
- Pisones or Pisos, a father and two sons, to whom the Arts Poetica is addressed. According to Porphyrio, the father was L. Calpurnius Piso, praefectus urbi in A.D. 14. Others hold that he was Cn. Calpurnius Piso, who, like Horace, fought under Brutus and Cassius at Philippi. He had a son, Cneius, who was consul 7 B.C., and another Lucius, who was consul in 1 B.C. A.P. 6, 235. See Pompilius
- Pitholeon, according to Bentley the same as Pitholaus, who libelled Julius Caesar in his verses (Suetonius, Iulius, 75), S. i. 10. 22
- Plato, (1) the comic poet, representative of Attic Middle Comedy, S. ii. 3. 11; (2) celebrated Greek philosopher, disciple of Socrates, S. ii. 4. 3
- Plautinus, adj., of Plautus, A.P. 270
- Plautus, Roman comic poet, who died in 184 B.C.; E. ii. 1. 58, 170; A.P. 54
- Plotius, i.e. Plotius Tucca, friend of Virgil and Horace. He and Varius were Virgil's literary executors. S. i. 5. 40; i. 10. 81
- Polemon, a luxurious Athenian youth, reformed by Xenocrates, whom he succeeded as head of the Academic school of philosophy, S. ii. 3. 254
- Pollio, i.e. C. Asinius Pollio, distinguished as statesman, orator, historian, and tragic poet, S. i. 10. 42, 85
- Pollux, twin brother of Castor, E. ii. 1. 5 (cf. S. ii. 1. 26)
- Pompeius Grosphus. See Grosphus

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Pompilius, adj., Pompilian. The Calpurnian gens, to which the Pisones belonged, claimed descent from Numa Pompilius, second king of Rome. A.P. 292
- Pomponius, a dissolute youth, S. i. 4. 52
- Porcius, a parasite of Nasidienus. The name is probably fictitious and chosen for its meaning (porcus, a pig), S. ii. 8. 23
- Praeneste, an ancient city of Latium, now Palestrina, E. i. 2. 2
- Praenestinus, adj., of Praeneste, S. i. 7. 28
- Priamides, son of Priam, Hector, S. i. 7. 12
- Priamus, Priam, king of Troy, S. ii. 3. 195; A.P. 137
- Priapus, god of gardens (his image served as a kind of scarecrow), S. i. 8. 2
- Priscus, a changeable person, S. ii. 7. 9
- Procne, wife of Tereus and sister of Philomela, changed into a swallow, A.P. 187
- Proserpina, daughter of Ceres and wife of Pluto, S. ii. 5. 110
- Proteus, a sea-god, who had the power of changing himself into all kinds of forms, S. ii. 3. 71; E. i. 1. 90
- Publicola, cognomen of Q. Pedius, S. i. 10. 28, though some take it there with Corvinus. See Messalla
- Publius, a praenomen, S. ii. 5. 32
- Pupius, a tragic poet, E. i. 1. 67
- Pusilla, a pet name for a girl, meaning "tiny," S. ii. 3. 216
- Puteal. See Libo
- Pylades, faithful friend of Orestes, S. ii. 3. 139
- Pyrria, a maid-servant who figured in a togata of Titinius, E. i. 13. 14
- Pythagoras, a philosopher of Samos of the sixth century B.C., who believed in the transmigration of souls, S. ii. 4. 3; ii. 6. 63
- Pythagoreus, adj., of Pythagoras, E. ii. 1. 52
- Pythia, the Pythian games, celebrated every five years at Delphi in honour of Apollo, A.P. 414
- Pythias, a maid figuring as a character in a play of Caecilius, A.P. 238
- QUINCTIUS, unknown except from E. i. 16. 1
- Quinquatrus, a festival of five days in honour of Minerva, beginning on March 19th, during which school-boys had holidays, E. ii. 2. 197
- Quintilius, i.e. Quintilius Varus, of Cremona, a friend of Virgil and Horace (see Odes i. 24), A.P. 438
- Quintus, (1) Horace's own praenomen, S. ii. 6. 37; (2) an ordinary praenomen, S. ii. 3. 243; ii. 5. 32
- Quirinus, i.e. Romulus, representative of the Roman people, S. i. 10. 32
- Quiris, a Roman citizen, E. i. 6. 7
- RAMNES, one of the three centuries of equites or knights established by Romulus. They represent the equites of Horace's day, and stand for young men as contrasted with old. A.P. 342
- Rex, i.e. Rupilius Rex, of Praeneste, who served in Africa under Attius Verus, became Praetor under Julius Caesar, and later joined the army of Brutus, S. i. 7. 1, 5, 6, 9, 19, 25, 35
- Rhenus, the river Rhine, S. i. 10. 37; A.P. 18
- Rhodium, adj., of Rhodes, S. i. 10. 22
- Rhodos, the island of Rhodes, off the south-west coast of Asia Minor, E. i. 11. 17, 21
- Roma, Rome, S. i. 5. 1; i. 6. 76; ii. 1. 59; ii. 6. 23; ii. 7. 13, 28; E. i. 2. 2; i. 7. 44; i. 8. 12; i. 11. 11, 21; i. 14. 17; i. 16. 18; i. 20. 10; ii. 1. 61, 103, 256; ii. 2. 41, 65, 87
- Romanus, adj., Roman, S. i. 4. 85; i. 6. 48; ii. 1. 87; ii. 2. 10, 52; ii. 4. 10; ii. 7. 54; E. i. 1. 70; i. 3. 9; i. 12. 25; i. 18. 49; ii. 1.

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- 29; ii. 2. 94; A.P. 54, 113, 264, 285, 325
- Romulus, the mythical founder of Rome, E. ii. 1. 5. See Quirinus
- Roscius, (1) a person unknown, S. ii. 6. 35; (2) the great actor, a friend of Cicero, E. ii. 1. 82; (3) adj., Roscian. The Roscian Law, passed by L. Roscius Otho in 67 B.C., gave the first fourteen rows in the theatre to the equites, who had to have a property minimum of 400,000 sesterces, E. i. 1. 62
- Rubi, now Ruvo, a town about thirty miles from Canusium, S. i. 5. 94
- Rufa, a pet name for a girl (= "red-headed"), S. ii. 3. 216
- Rufillus, an unknown fop, S. i. 2. 27; i. 4. 92
- Rufus. See Nasidienus
- Ruso, i.e. Octavius Ruso, a money-lender, who also wrote histories, S. i. 3. 86
- Rutuba, a gladiator, S. ii. 7. 96
- SABBATA, the Jewish Sabbath, S. i. 9. 69
- Sabellus, adj., Sabellian or Sabine, of the Sabelli or Sabini, S. i. 9. 29; ii. 1. 36; E. i. 16. 49
- Sabinus, (1) adj., Sabine, of the Sabines, a people of Central Italy, S. ii. 7. 118; E. i. 7. 77; ii. 1. 25; (2) a friend of Torquatus, E. i. 5. 27
- Sagana, a witch, S. i. 8. 25, 48
- Salernum, a town in Campania, now Salerno, E. i. 15. 1
- Saliaris, adj., of the Salii, the twelve dancing priests of Mars, E. ii. 1. 86
- Sallustius, i.e. C. Sallustius Crispus, grand-nephew of the historian Sallust (see Odes ii. 2), S. i. 2. 48
- Samnites, the Samnites, living in Central Italy, E. ii. 2. 98
- Samos, an island off the coast of Asia Minor, now Samo, E. i. 11. 2, 21
- Sappho, the famous poetess of Lesbos, of the sixth century B.C., E. i. 19. 28
- Sardis, capital of Lydia, E. i. 11. 2
- Sardus, adj., from Sardinia, S. i. 3. 5; A.P. 375
- Sarmentus, a slave of M. Favonius, of Etruscan birth, freed by Maecenas, became a scriba in the quaestor's department and sat among the equites. When old he was reduced to poverty, S. i. 5. 52, 55, 56
- Satureianus, adj., of Satrium, the district in which Tarentum in southern Italy was founded, S. i. 6. 59
- Saturnalia, a festival beginning on the 17th December, during which the Romans granted much licence to their slaves, S. ii. 3. 5
- Saturnius (numerus), the Saturnian measure, a verse form native to Italy, used by Livius Andronicus in his translation of the Odyssey, and by Naevius in his epic on the Punic War. It seems to have been based on accent rather than on quantity, E. iii. 1. 158
- Satyrus, a satyr, a companion of Bacchus, represented with the ears and tail of a goat. Also used in pl. of the Greek Satyric drama, in which Satyrs formed the chorus. E. i. 19. 4; ii. 2. 125; A.P. 221, 226, 233, 235
- Scaeva, (1) a spendthrift, who poisoned his mother, S. ii. 1. 53; (2) the unknown person to whom E. i. 17 is addressed; see p. 358
- Scaurus, adj., "with swollen ankles," perhaps a proper name in S. i. 3. 48
- Scetanus, a profligate, S. i. 4. 112
- Scipiadus, one of the family of the Scipios, a Scipio (the form was used by Lucilius), S. ii. 1. 17, 72
- Scylla, a sea-monster dwelling on one side of the Straits of Messene, A.P. 145. See Charybdis
- September, adj., belonging to September, the seventh month of the Roman year, E. i. 16. 16
- Septicius, a friend of Torquatus, E. i. 5. 26
- Septimius, a friend of Horace, whom the poet introduces to Tiberius in E. i. 9

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Servilius (Balatro). See Balatro
- Servius, (1) perhaps the son of Servius Sulpicius Rufus, a lawyer and friend of Cicero, S. i. 10. 86; (2) see Oppidius
- Sextilis, the sixth month of the Roman year, afterwards called August, E. i. 7. 2; i. 11. 19
- Siculus, adj., Sicilian, E. i. 2. 58; i. 12. 1; ii. 1. 58; A.P. 463
- Sidonius, adj., of Sidon, a city of Phoenicia, Phoenician, E. i. 10. 26
- Silenus, an old Satyr, chief attendant of Bacchus, A.P. 239
- Silvanus, an Italian god of forests and the country, E. ii. 1. 143
- Simo, an old man, figuring in a comedy of Caecilius, A.P. 238
- Sinuessa, a town of Latium, near the modern Mondragone, S. i. 5. 40
- Sinuessanus, adj., of or near Sinuessa, E. i. 5. 5
- Siren, a Siren. The Sirens were fabulous creatures, half maiden, half bird, living on rocky islands near the Campanian coast, and with their songs enticing sailors to their destruction. See Homer, Odyssey, xii. S. ii. 3. 14; E. i. 2. 22
- Sisenna, a foul-mouthed person, S. i. 7. 8
- Sisyphus, (1) a dwarf in the house of M. Antonius, S. i. 3. 47; (2) mythical founder of Corinth, famous for its bronze, subject of a Satyric drama of Aeschylus, S. ii. 3. 21
- Smyrna, a famous city of Ionia, E. i. 11. 3
- Socraticus, adj., of Socrates, the famous Athenian philosopher, A.P. 310
- Sophocles, famous Greek tragic poet of the 5th century B.C., E. ii. 1. 163
- Sosii, brothers, who were Horace's booksellers, E. i. 20. 2; A.P. 345
- Staberius, a miser, S. ii. 3. 84, 89
- Stertinus, (1) a philosopher, who wrote 220 volumes on Stoicism; S. ii. 3. 33, 296; (2) adj., of Stertinus, E. i. 12. 20
- Stoicus, a Stoic, S. ii. 3. 160, 300
- Suadela, the goddess of Persuasion, a personification (=Πειθώ), E. i. 6. 38
- Sulcius, a public prosecutor, S. i. 4. 65
- Sulla, i.e. L. Cornelius Sulla, the dictator, S. i. 2. 64
- Surrentum, a city at the south end of the Bay of Naples, now Sorrento, E. i. 17. 52
- Syrus, (1) a common slave-name, S. i. 6. 38; (2) a gladiator, S. ii. 6. 44
- TANAIS, a freedman of Maecenas, a eunuch, S. i. 1. 105
- Tantalus, a Phrygian king, who offered his own child as food for the gods, and was punished in Hades by a craving for food and drink that escaped his reach, S. i. 1. 68
- Tarentinus, adj., of Tarentum, where a famous purple dye was produced, E. ii. 1. 207
- Tarentum, a city of Calabria in southern Italy, now Taranto, S. i. 6. 105; ii. 4. 34; E. i. 7. 45; i. 16. 11
- Tarpa, i.e. Sprius Maecius Tarpa, S. i. 10. 38. See Maecius
- Tarquinius, i.e. Tarquinius Superbus, last king of Rome, S. i. 6. 13
- Taurus, i.e. T. Statilius Taurus, who was consul for the second time in 26 B.C., E. i. 5. 4
- Teanum, i.e. Teanum Sidicinum, a town in Campania, now Teano, E. i. 1. 86
- Telemachus, son of Ulysses and Penelope, who visited Menelaus in Sparta in quest of news of his father (Homer, Odyssey iv.), E. i. 7. 40
- Telephus, son of Hercules, and king of Mysia. He was wounded by the spear of Achilles, but finally healed by its rust. This was the subject of a tragedy by Euripides, A.P. 96, 104
- Tellus, the goddess Earth, all-nourishing, E. ii. 1. 143
- Terentius, i.e. P. Terentius Afer,

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- comic poet, who lived 185-159 B.C., S. i. 2. 20; ii. 1. 59
- Teucer, son of Telamon, king of Salamis, and Hesione, and brother of Ajax, S. ii. 3. 204. See Ajax
- Thebae, a city of Boeotia, founded by Cadmus with the help of Amphion, birth-place of Pindar, S. ii. 5. 84; E. i. 16. 74; ii. 1. 213; A.P. 118
- Thebanus, adj., of Thebes, E. i. 3. 13; A.P. 394
- Theoninus, adj., of Theon, an unknown person of a bitter tongue, E. i. 18. 82
- Thespis, of Icaria, who first exhibited tragedies in Athens, E. ii. 1. 163; A.P. 276
- Thessalus, adj., of Thessaly, a country of northern Greece, famous for magic and drugs, E. ii. 2. 209
- Thrace, Thrace, a land north of Greece, E. i. 3. 3; i. 16. 13
- Thrax, adj., Thracian, or as subst., a Thracian, a name given to a gladiator who was armed with a Thracian buckler and short sword, S. ii. 6. 4; E. i. 18. 36
- Thurinus, adj., of Thurii, a town of Lucania, on the Tarentine Gulf, S. ii. 8. 20
- Thyestes, son of Pelops, brother of Atreus, who placed before him for food his own son, A.P. 91
- Tiberinus, adj., of the Tiber, S. ii. 2. 31; E. i. 11. 4
- Tiberis, the Tiber, river of Rome, now Tevere; S. i. 9. 18; ii. 1. 8; ii. 3. 292; E. i. 11. 19
- Tiberius, (1) i.e. Tiberius Claudius Nero. See Claudius; (2) son of Oppidius, S. ii. 3. 173
- Tibur, ancient city of Latium, on the Anio, now Tivoli, E. i. 7. 45; i. 8. 12; ii. 2. 3
- Tiburs, adj., of Tibur, Tiburtine, S. i. 6. 108; ii. 4. 70
- Tigellius, a freedman from Sardinia, a favourite of Caesar and of Cleopatra, a well-known musician, S. i. 2. 3; i. 3. 4; probably the same as Hermogenes Tigellius. See Hermogenes
- Tillius, probably a brother of Tillius Cimber, who was among Caesar's assassins. He was removed from the senate by Caesar, but later resumed his dignities and became a tribune of the soldiers, also, it would seem, a praetor, S. i. 6. 24, 107
- Timagenes, a native of Alexandria, was taken prisoner by A. Gabinius and sold as a slave. In Rome, where he received his freedom through Faustus, son of Sulla, he taught rhetoric, and won as patrons, first Augustus and then Asinius Pollio, with whom he lived at Tusculum. E. i. 19. 15
- Tiresias, famous blind soothsayer of Thebes, S. ii. 5. 1
- Tisiphone, one of the Furies, S. i. 8. 34
- Titius, a young Roman who ventured to present the Greek poet Pindar in Latin dress, E. i. 3. 9
- Torquatus, a friend of Horace, perhaps the Aulus Torquatus who, according to Nepos in his life of Atticus (c. xi.), was with Brutus and Cassius at Philippi. He is addressed in Odes iv. 7 and E. i. 5. 3
- Trausius, an unknown person, both poor and extravagant, S. ii. 2. 99
- Trebatius, i.e. C. Trebatius Testa, a lawyer of distinction, a friend of Cicero and of Caesar. From Cicero's Letters (Ad fam. vii. 6-22) addressed to him, we learn that he was a good swimmer and a hard drinker. S. ii. 1. 4, 78
- Trebonius, an adulterer, S. i. 4. 114
- Triquetra, adj., "three-cornered," applied to Sicily, S. ii. 6. 55
- Trivicum, a town of Apulia, now Treviso, S. i. 5. 79
- Troia, Troy, S. ii. 3. 191; ii. 5. 18; E. i. 2. 19; A.P. 141
- Troianus, adj., of Troy, E. i. 2. 1; A.P. 147
- Tullius, i.e. Servius Tullius, sixth king of Rome, born a slave, S. i. 6. 9
- Turbo, a gladiator, of small stature but great courage, S. ii. 3. 310

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Turius, praetor in 76 B.C., S. ii. 1. 49
- Tuscus, adj., of Etruria, Etruscan, or Tuscan, applied to the Tiber, which rises in Etruria, S. ii. 2. 83; to the Vicus Tuscus, a street leading from the Forum to the Velabrum, and perhaps named from the Etruscan workmen who once lived there, S. ii. 3. 228; to the sea, south and west of Italy, E. ii. 1. 202
- Tyndaridae, children of Tyndareus and Leda, including Castor and Pollux, Helen and Clytemnestra, the last of whom slew her husband Agamemnon on his return from Troy, S. i. 1. 100
- Tyrius, adj., of Tyre, a city of Phoenicia famous for its purple, S. ii. 4. 84; E. i. 6. 18
- Tyrrhenus, adj., of the Tyrrheni or Etruscans, who were famous for their bronze-work, E. ii. 2. 180
- Tyrtæus, a writer of elegiac verse, said to be a native of Attica, who with his songs aided the Spartans in their Second Messenian War, A.P. 402
- ULIXES, Ulysses, the hero Odysseus of the Odyssey, S. ii. 3. 197, 204; ii. 5. 100; E. i. 2. 18; i. 6. 63; i. 7. 40. Cf. A.P. 141 and see Laertiades
- Ulubrae, a small town of Latium, near the Pomptine marshes, E. i. 11. 30
- Umbër, adj., Umbrian, of the Umbri, a tribe of Northern Italy, S. ii. 4. 40
- Umbrenus, a veteran soldier, S. ii. 2. 133
- Ummidius, a rich and mean man, S. i. 1. 95
- Utica, a town in Africa, north of Carthage, E. i. 20. 18
- VACUNA, a Sabine goddess, whose name popular etymology associated with vacuus, "idle," E. i. 10. 49
- Vala, probably Numonius Vala, a friend of Horace, addressed in E. i. 15
- Valerius, i.e. P. Valerius Publicola, colleague of Brutus after the expulsion of the kings, S. i. 6. 12. See Messalla
- Valgius, i.e. C. Valgius Rufus, consul 12 B.C., an elegiac poet, to whom Od. ii. 9 is addressed, S. i. 10. 82
- Varia, a small town in the Sabine territory, now Vico Varo, E. i. 14. 3
- Varius, i.e., L. Varius, tragic and epic poet, friend of Virgil and Horace, S. i. 5. 40, 93; i. 6. 55; i. 9. 23; i. 10. 44, 81; S. ii. 8. 21, 68; E. ii. 1. 247; A.P. 55. See Plotius
- Varro Atacinus, i.e. P. Terentius Varro, called Atacinus from his birth-place on the river Atax (Aude) in Gallia Narbonensis. He wrote Argonautica, and, according to Horace, Satires, S. i. 10. 46
- Veianius, a retired gladiator, E. i. 1. 4
- Veiens, of Veii, Veientine. Veii was an old town in Etruria, destroyed by Camillus, near Isola Farnese, eleven miles north of Rome, E. ii. 2. 167
- Velia, a town of Lucania, also called Elea, associated with the Eleatic School of philosophy, E. i. 15. 1
- Velina, adj., with tribus "tribe" understood. The Veline tribe was one of the last of the thirty-five tribes of Roman citizens to be formed, E. i. 6. 52
- Venafranus, adj., of Venafrum, S. ii. 4. 69
- Venafrum, now Venafro, the most northern town of Campania, celebrated for its olives, S. ii. 8. 45
- Venucula, name of a grape, S. ii. 4. 71
- Venus, daughter of Jupiter and Dione, goddess of love and beauty, E. i. 6. 88; i. 18. 21
- Venusinus, adj., of Venusia, an old Sannite town in Apulia, near which Horace was born, S. ii. 1. 35

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Vergilius, i.e., P. Vergilius Maro, the great poet Virgil, S. i. 5. 40, 48; i. 6. 55; i. 10. 45, 81; E. ii. 1. 247; A.P. 55
- Vertumnus, the god of the changing seasons, and the god of exchange (buying and selling). A statue of the god stood at the end of the Vicus Tuscus, where it entered the Forum. S. ii. 7. 14; E. i. 20. 1
- Vesta, goddess of the hearth and household, emblem of family life. The Temple of Vesta in Rome stood at the east end of the Forum. S. i. 9. 35; E. ii. 2. 114
- Via Sacra, oldest and most famous street in Rome, running from the Velia through the Forum along the foot of the Palatine; probably called sacra because of the shrines along its course, S. i. 9. 1 (cf. Epode iv. 7)
- Vibidius, a parasite of Maecenas, S. ii. 8. 22, 33, 40, 80
- Villius, perhaps Sextus Villius, friend of Milo, S. i. 2. 64
- Vinius, the person addressed in E. i. 13. From l. 8 it is inferred that his cognomen was Asina, or Asellus. The former is found with the Cornelian gens; the latter with the Annia and Claudia gentes
- Viscus and pl. Visci. Nothing certain is known of these men, except that one, being called Thurinus, doubtless came from Thurii. The scholiast says that the two mentioned in the tenth satire, Book I., were brothers, sons of Vibius Viscus, a rich friend of Augustus, who remained an eques even after his sons had become senators, S. i. 9. 22; i. 10. 83; ii. 8. 20
- Visellius, unknown, S. i. 1. 105
- Volanerius, a parasite, S. ii. 7. 15
- Volcanus, Vulcan, god of fire, S. i. 5. 74
- Volteius Mena, E. i. 7. 55, 64, 91. See Mena
- Voranus, a thief, S. i. 8. 39
- ZEPHYRUS, god of the west wind, E. i. 7. 13
- Zethus, brother of Amphion, whose lyre he despised, being himself a shepherd and huntsman. The story of the two was told in the Antiope of Euripides, and the Antiope of Pacuvius, E. i. 18. 42. See Amphion